

Kolleg-Forschungsgruppe

multiple secularities

Christoph Kleine and Monika Wohlrab-Sahr

Research Programme of the HCAS
"Multiple Secularities – Beyond the West,
Beyond Modernities"

Working Paper #1

Working Paper Series of the HCAS „Multiple Secularities - Beyond the West,
Beyond Modernities“

#1: Christoph Kleine, and Monika Wohlrab-Sahr. “Research Programme of the HCAS ‘Multiple Secularities – Beyond the West, Beyond Modernities’ ”
Leipzig, March 2016

© Leipzig University, HCAS „Multiple Secularities – Beyond the West, Beyond Modernities“

The HCAS is part of Leipzig University and funded by the German Research Council (DFG).

UNIVERSITÄT
LEIPZIG

DFG

Deutsche
Forschungsgemeinschaft

Christoph Kleine
Monika Wohlrab-Sahr

Research Programme of the HCAS

“Multiple Secularities – Beyond the West, Beyond Modernities”

Contents

1	Subject area and classification
1.1	Research question.....	5
1.2	Definition of terms.....	6
2	Current state of research.....	8
2.1	Universalism or Particularism?.....	9
2.2	Secularism: Diversity or dominance of Western secular modernity?.....	13
2.3	Multiple Secularities.....	14
3	Question and central research aims.....	15
3.1	Premises and hypotheses.....	19
3.2	Sub-questions.....	25
3.2.1	Emic norm systems, differentiation practices and paths of development.....	25
3.2.2	Reference problems of differentiation and boundary demarcation processes.....	26
3.2.3	Guiding ideas of Secularity.....	28
3.2.4	Types of cultural interaction and acquisition, transfer and entanglement.....	29
4	References.....	32

Research Programme of the HCAS

“Multiple Secularities – Beyond the West, Beyond Modernities”

1 Subject area and classification

1.1 Research question

The project seeks to explore the boundaries that distinguish between the religious and non-religious, in modern as well as pre-modern societies. In doing so, we are aligning ourselves with current debates but we are approaching the debated issues from a basic theoretical perspective. At present, a general distinction can be drawn between three narratives: The first claims the dwindling presence and relevance of religion (“secularisation”); the second regards religion to be returning globally, consequently irritating the self-perception of modern societies (“return of religions”, “post-secular society”). According to the third, religion has always been present and has simply changed shape, meaning secularisation assumptions are misleading (“invisible religion”). There is also a theoretical-methodological conflict to be taken into consideration. Where the secularisation hypothesis considers its theories and methods to be universally applicable, the critics of this theory not only increasingly challenge the transferability of Western development paths, but also the transferability of the concepts used. This applies right down to the challenge of the religious/secular dual, which is understood to be an expression of Western experience and power of interpretation that forces other cultures into Western schematisations.

In contrast, we are formulating an alternative position, in which we are trying to explore the boundaries between the religious and non-religious beyond normative concepts. We are particularly seeking such boundaries in regions that differ greatly from the so-called “West” in the “Modern World” in terms of culture and history: In various Asian regions and – partly overlapping with these – in the so-called “Islamic World”, but also in different epochs. This is linked to a plea for comparability across multifaceted regions and cultural contexts, and for investigating their entangled history.

In light of current discussions, the significance of this question is evident: Wherever religion is discussed across different Asian regions and the heterogeneous “Islamic World”, the issue of their borders is always raised. For example, when talking about folk religions and cults, are they treated as “religion” or as “cultural legacy” (in China)? How do pluralised ways of life interact with religious norms (e.g. in Egypt)? Is the act of commemorating the war dead at a Shintō shrine a religious one (in Japan)? Does art have its own set of rules, or is it constrained for fear of violating religious feelings? And vice versa, can religious groups and religious actors apply their own rules, even if they clash with those of their surroundings (e.g. in India)? When this happens, negotiations and conflicts, attacks and provocations arise: people start defining borders, making claims and sanctioning the legitimate and the illegitimate. Our assumption proposes that differences in the vehemence and structure of boundary debates can only be explained satisfactorily if the diverging historical experiences of the regions explored are taken into consideration.

This requires a systematic investigation of the phenomenon in pre-modern epochs, in which boundaries between religious and non-religious fields of practice are less explicitly manifest in semantics and institutional oppositions. This will initially require some ground work. However, we do not see these pre-modern societies across the board as steeped in religion and undifferentiated, and religion as “embedded” beyond recognition.¹ Consequently, we are searching for distinctions, which should be studied in relation to their structure, significance and consequences. In doing so, we cannot avoid – as a first step – making use of a modern vocabulary, without losing sight of its origin. In this regard, the same applies to the term “secularity” and the term “religion”.²

The research to be done under the auspices of the Humanities Centre of Advanced Studies (HCAS) – “Multiple Secularities: Beyond the West, beyond Modernities” – is only possible as a collective undertaking, as part of which experts from various disciplines and in specific regions, languages and religions put their research projects up for discussion and cooperatively develop them further in relation to a guiding theme.

1.2 Definition of terms

As part of this project, we will inevitably touch on the problematic conceptual history of secularity, secularisation and secularism, and their associated connotations.³ This is all closely related to interpretations of the “modern era” and – from a global perspective – to the harmonisation and diffusion expectations that were formulated as part of modernisation theories and have time and again been criticised. Even the “classic” secularisation theory got caught up in the wake of this criticism. Within the framework of modernisation theory, work on *Multiple Modernities*⁴ has given rise to a new approach, in which different paths into the modern world were assumed. According to this approach, other world regions deal with Western modernity against the backdrop of their specific cultural imprints – with diverging results.

1 Mary Beard, John North, and Simon Price (1998), Religions of Rome. Volume 1. A History (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press), 43; Jörg Rüpke (2001), Die Religion der Römer: Eine Einführung (München: Beck); criticised by: Brent Nongbri (2008), “Dislodging ‘Embedded’ Religion: A Brief Note on a Scholarly Trope,” Numen 55/4: 440–60.

2 Ibid., 452.

The Multiple Secularities project⁵, upon whose preliminary work we are building, applied this perspective in the field of religion/non-religion. In doing so, the analytical concept of secularity was strengthened against the ideological term of secularism, and the plurality of secularities in Western regions and beyond was emphasised and conceptually defined.⁶

In international debates, the term secularism is predominantly used,⁷ which refers equally to institutional arrangements for separating politics and religion, and to their ideological legitimisation. As this ideological purport has been linked to the term secularism since its conception, we are reserving it here solely for the ideological objective of separation, its

3 E.g. Werner Conze, Hans W. Strätz, and Hermann Zabel (1984), “Säkularisation, Säkularisierung,” in Geschichtliche Grundbegriffe: Historisches Lexikon zur politisch-sozialen Sprache in Deutschland. Vol. 5. Ed. Otto Brunner, Werner Conze, and Reinhart Koselleck (Stuttgart: Klett), 789–829; Hermann Lübke (1975), Säkularisierung: Geschichte eines ideenpolitischen Begriffs (Freiburg, München: Verlag Karl Alber); José Casanova (2011), “The secular, secularizations, secularisms,” in Rethinking secularism. Ed. Craig Calhoun, Mark Juergensmeyer, and Jonathan VanAntwerpen (Oxford: Oxford University Press), 54–74.

4 Shmuel N. Eisenstadt (2000), “Multiple Modernities,” Daedalus 129/1: 1–29; Wolfgang Knöbl (2007), Die Kontingenz der Moderne: Wege in Europa, Asien und Amerika (Frankfurt am Main, New York: Campus); Thomas Schwinn (2009), “Multiple Modernities: Konkurrierende Thesen und offene Fragen. Ein Literaturbericht in konstruktiver Absicht,” Zeitschrift für Soziologie 38: 454–76.

5 Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Marian Burchardt (2011), “Vielfältige Säkularitäten: Vorschlag zu einer vergleichenden Analyse religiös-säkularer Grenzbeziehungen,” Denkströme 7: 53–71; Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Marian Burchardt (2012), “Multiple Secularities: Toward a Cultural Sociology of Secular Modernities,” Comparative Sociology 11/6: 875–909.

6 See Marian Burchardt, Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Matthias Middell, eds. (2015), Multiple Secularities Beyond the West: Religion and Modernity in the Global Age (Boston: De Gruyter).

7 In contrast: Charles Taylor (2007), A Secular Age (Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press); also see Marion Eggert, and Lucian Hölscher, eds. (2013), Religion and secularity: Transformations and transfers of religious discourses in Europe and Asia (Leiden: Brill).

associated movements and resultant measures. In contrast, we use the term secularity in a more general sense for institutionally as well as symbolically embedded forms and arrangements for distinguishing between religion and other societal areas, practices and interpretations. We therefore do not understand secularity to be the opposite of religion,⁸ but rather associate the term with the modality of making distinctions, and are investigating this modality, as well as its prerequisites and effects.

In contrast, secularisation on the one hand indicates a process, as part of which distinctions are institutionalised and the influence of religion on other societal sub-domains is lessened (and vice versa).⁹ On the other hand, this term encompasses the decline of religious belonging, belief and participation, as well as the privatisation of the religious.¹⁰ As shown by Casanova, all three processes are not necessarily linked.

When we use the term secularity as an analytical term, we certainly cannot completely wipe away the normative connotations of secularism and secularisation. This problem can only be overcome through open discussions and conceptual reflection. For this reason, we are using the term as a heuristic concept.

2 Current state of research

In the stricter sense, there is hardly a current state of research for a basic theoretical project that seeks out the boundaries between religious and other spheres. A type of criticism rooted in post-colonial approaches makes some reference to the topic, but remains wholly negative insofar as it challenges the application of modern, Western concepts in principle. Nevertheless, discussions surrounding secularism/secularisation/secularity are relevant to our project, and it will certainly exert influence on them, even if we are not about seeking to adopt a position “within” the debate.

Since coming into existence, these terms have been intertwined with political and societal discussions. They have been associated with interpretations of illegal expropriation as well as with progress, with the dissolution of the “wonderful amalgamation of the spiritual and the worldly” (Eichendorff), as well as with the creation of a secular “world culture.”¹¹ An em-

8 Christoph Bochinger, and Katharina Frank (2013), “Religion, Spiritualität und Säkularität in der Schweiz,” in Handbuch Sozialwesen Schweiz. Ed. Anna M. Riedi (Bern: Haupt), 202.

9 Mark Chaves (1994), “Secularization as Declining Religious Authority,” Social Forces 72/3: 749–74.

10 José Casanova (1994), Public Religions in the Modern World (Chicago: University of Chicago Press).

11 See Conze, Strätz, and Zabel (1984), “Säkularisation, Säkularisierung“.

pirically oriented sociology, which isolates indicators, formulates hypotheses and objectifies secularisation processes as measurable, was not able to overcome this value-oriented charge. An impressive array of comparable research results has undoubtedly been compiled in this field. However, attempts to develop this position into a general secularisation theory beyond certain regions¹² faced significant difficulties.

2.1 Universalism or Particularism?

Criticisms of secularisation theory can polemically be summarised as challenging the claim of describing universal developments, developing generalisable instruments and concepts, and establishing neutral institutional contexts.

The “American case” has always provided irritating exceptions to the alleged relationship between modernisation and secularisation. What used to be described as American exceptionalism¹³ in comparison with Europe can no longer be characterised as such on a global scale. In the light of enduring differences, central hypotheses of secularisation theory – the relationship between pluralisation and secularisation for instance – were finally called into question.¹⁴ This ultimately led to the reversal of exceptionalism: Secular Europe then appeared as the exception in an otherwise persistently, or even increasingly, religious world.¹⁵

Building on Martin’s differentiation between different secularisation paths (see above), historians and sociologists called for historical constellations to be taken into consideration.¹⁶ Even by modernisation theorists them-

12 David Martin (1978), A General Theory of Secularization (Oxford: Blackwell), and (2006), “Comparative Secularisation North and South,” in Religiosität in der säkularisierten Welt: Theoretische und empirische Beiträge zur Säkularisierungsdebatte in der Religionssoziologie. Ed. Manuel Franzmann, Christel Gärtner and Nicole Köck (Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften), 105–22, as well as (2014), Religion and Power: No Logos without Mythos (Burlington: Ashgate).

13 Steve Bruce (1999), Choice and religion: A critique of rational choice theory (Oxford, New York: Oxford University Press).

14 Rodney Stark, and William S. Bainbridge (1987), A theory of religion (New York: Peter Lang); Stephen Warner (1993), “Work in Progress toward a New Paradigm for the Sociological Study in Religion in the United States,” American Journal of Sociology 98/5: 1044–93; Rodney Stark, and Laurence R. Iannaccone (1994), “A Supply-Side Reinterpretation of the ‘Secularization’ of Europe,” Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 33/3: 230–52 among others.

15 Peter L. Berger, ed. (1999), The Desecularization of the World: Resurgent Religion and World Politics (Washington, DC: Ethics and Public Policy Center).

16 Philip S. Gorski (2000), “Historicizing the secularization debate: Church, state and so-selves the cultural background of certain regions was increasingly brought to account. Given the “persistence of traditional values”¹⁷, Inglehart set out his analyses on a cultural map, on which nations “characterised by Confucianism” are positioned near to post-communist and Protestant-influenced countries. Further objections pertain to disregarding the role of actors¹⁸ and the accompanying suggestion of self-perpetuating secularisation and differentiation processes. Luckmann¹⁹ challenged the empirical foundation of secularisation theory in general, and called it a “modern myth”²⁰, and van der Veer saw in it “one of the most deadly master narratives in the social sciences.”²¹

When dealing with the public role of religion, Casanova²² made a critical revision to secularisation theory. He distinguished between the constituent parts – religious decline, privatisation, differentiation – as independent sub-processes, but saw only functional differentiation as an inevitable requirement for secularisation. However, privatisation does not necessarily relate to withdrawing from the public domain. When Luhmann²³ spoke of the “privatisation of religious decision-making” and Taylor introduced the concept of the “secular condition”²⁴, the increasing contingency of religious or non-religious positions and their cultural disembedding²⁵ were ciety in late medieval and early modern Europe, ca. 1300-1700,” American Sociological Review 65: 138–67; Hugh McLeod, Hugh, ed. (1995), European Religion in the Age of Great Cities 1830-1930 (London, New York: Routledge).

- 17 Ronald Inglehart, and Wayne E. Baker (2000), “Modernization, Cultural Change, and the Persistence of Traditional Values,” American Sociological Review 65/1: 29.
- 18 Christian Smith (2003), “Introduction: Rethinking the secularization of American public life,” in The Secular Revolution: Power, interests, and conflict in the secularization of American public life. Ed. Christian Smith (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press), 1–95; Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, Thomas Schmidt-Lux, and Uta Karstein (2008), “Secularization as Conflict,” Social Compass 55/2: 127–39.
- 19 Thomas Luckmann (1980), Lebenswelt und Gesellschaft: Grundstrukturen und geschichtliche Wandlungen (Paderborn: Ferdinand Schöningh).
- 20 Also see Ian Hunter (2015), “Secularization: The Birth of a Modern Combat Concept,” Modern Intellectual History 12/1: 1–32; Harvey G. Cox, and Jan Swyngedouw (2000), “The Myth of the Twentieth Century: The Rise and Fall of Secularization,” Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 27/1-2: 1–13; Boaz Huss (2014), “The Sacred is the Profane, Spirituality is not Religion: The Decline of the Religion/Secular Divide and the Emergence of the Critical Discourse on Religion,” Method & Theory in the Study of Religion, 2014, 1–7; criticised by Detlef Pollack (2003), Säkularisierung – ein moderner Mythos? Studien zum religiösen Wandel in Deutschland (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck).
- 21 Peter van der Veer (1995), “The Secular Production of Religion,” Etnofoor 8/2: 5.
- 22 Casanova (1994), Public Religions in the Modern World.
- 23 Niklas Luhmann (1977), Funktion der Religion (Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp), 232.
- 24 Taylor (2007), A Secular Age, 3.
- 25 Also see Anthony Giddens (1991), The consequences of modernity (Cambridge: Blackwell).

addressed. This process is not limited to the West²⁶ and has a long-standing tradition in the Buddhist sphere of influence.

Eventually the assumption of functional differentiation as a “key hypothesis” of secularisation theory suffered criticism. According to Asad,²⁷ even the differentiation between religion and secularity is influenced by a specifically Christian background. Furthermore, he sees the term, function and legitimate place of religion as defined from a secular perspective in the modern era²⁸. He therefore claims that the accompanying boundary demarcation processes between the religious and the secular need to be examined.²⁹ In dealing with this criticism, Casanova³⁰ has moved on to also interpret functional differentiation against its Christian background. Taking this criticism seriously, it seems it is no longer possible to devise comprehensive systematisation analogous to secularisation theory. As a result of Asad’s intervention, the type of questions that are being asked has shifted significantly towards examining the emergence and effects of the religious/secular dual, as well as comparable duals.³¹ While early religious studies and sociology treated religion by implication largely as a clearly identifiable sub-domain of all societies, experts influenced by Postco-

26 E.g. Olivier Roy (2006), Der islamische Weg nach Westen: Globalisierung, Entwurzelung und Radikalisierung (München: Pantheon) and (2011), Heilige Einfalt: Über die politischen Gefahren entwurzelter Religionen (München: Randomhouse).

27 Talal Asad (1997), Genealogies of religion: Discipline and reasons of power in Christianity and Islam (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press); Talal Asad (2003), Formations of the Secular: Christianity, Islam, Modernity. Ed. Mieke Bal, and Hent de Vries (Stanford: Stanford University Press); Talal Asad (2008), “Reflections on Blasphemy and Secular Criticism,” in Religion: Beyond a Concept. Ed. Hent de Vries (New York: Fordham University Press), 1–46.

28 Asad (2003), Formations of the Secular, 191, and (2006), “Responses,” in Powers of the Secular Modern: Talal Asad and his Interlocutors. Ed. David Scott, and Charles Hirschkind (Stanford: Stanford University Press.), 209.

29 Ibid.

30 José Casanova (2006), “Secularization Revisited: A Reply to Talal Asad,” in Powers of the Secular Modern: Talal Asad and his Interlocutors. Ed. David Scott and Charles Hirschkind (Stanford: Stanford University Press), 12–30; José Casanova (2008), “Public religions revisited,” in Religion: Beyond a Concept. Ed. Hent de Vries (New York: Fordham University Press), 101–19; José Casanova (2009), Europas Angst vor der Religion (Berlin: Berlin University Press); Casanova (2011), “The secular, secularizations, secularisms”.

31 E.g. Asad (2003), Formations of the Secular; Timothy Fitzgerald (2003), „Religion and the Secular in Japan: Problems in history, social anthropology and the study of religion,“ electronic journal of contemporary japanese studies. <http://www.japanesestudies.org.uk/discussionpapers/Fitzgerald.html>, last accessed 8 April 2015; William E. Arnal, and Russell T. McCutcheon (2013), The Sacred is the Profane: The political nature of religion (New York: Oxford University Press); Huss (2014), “The Sacred is the Profane, Spirituality is not Religion“.

lonial Studies see in the differentiation between religion and non-religion a normative concept of Western modernity, which was first imposed on other cultures as part of colonialism and imperialism, often with a hegemonic purpose,³² and which may now already be starting to dissipate.³³ A central argument here is the lack of semantic equivalents for “our” modern term religion in pre-modern cultures outside Europe, or even in “other historical epochs” of European history. The post-colonial criticism of the transcultural use of religious/secular categories has accentuated sensitivities regarding the differences of indigenous taxonomies and norm systems, but in doing so has provided grounds for a culturally essentialist alterity discourse, thereby suggesting “Western development” cannot be compared with processes of social organisation in other parts of the world. Therefore, building on a “discursive construction of cultural otherness,”³⁴ there is the risk of perceiving modernisation and secularisation processes outside Europe and America merely as the result of diffusion, and thereby victimising corresponding societies as passive recipients of a world history dominated by the West. The contribution made by cultures outside Europe, as well as their creative potential to develop their own variations of modernity and secularity (or even go down completely different paths), are hereby called into question.

This is precisely where we wish to focus: By comparatively investigating the processes of boundary demarcation between the “religious” and “other spheres”, we are developing an instrument that can guide comparisons across regions and epochs.³⁵

32 Asad (1997), Genealogies of Religion, and (2003), Formations of the Secular; Arnal, McCutcheon (2013), The Sacred is the Profane; Russel T. McCutcheon (1997), Manufacturing Religion: The Discourse on Sui Generis Religion and the Politics of Nostalgia (New York: Oxford University Press); Russell T. McCutcheon (2007), “They Licked the Platter Clean: On the Co-Dependency of the Religious and The Secular,” Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 19/3-4: 173-99; Tomoko Masuzawa (2000), “The Production of ‘Religion’ and the Task of the Scholar: Russell McCutcheon among the Smiths,” Culture and Religion 1/1: 123-30; Tomoko Masuzawa (2005), The invention of world religions, or, How European universalism was preserved in the language of pluralism (Chicago: University of Chicago Press); Timothy Fitzgerald (1997), “A critique of ‘religion’ as a cross-cultural category,” Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 9/2: 91-110; Timothy Fitzgerald (2000), The Ideology of Religious Studies (New York: Oxford University Press); Timothy Fitzgerald (2010), Religion and the Secular: Historical and Colonial Formations (London: Equinox).

33 Huss (2014), “The Sacred is the Profane, Spirituality is not Religion“.

34 Jürgen Osterhammel (2011), Die Verwandlung der Welt: Eine Geschichte des 19. Jahrhunderts (München: Beck), 50.

35 In doing so, we are applying a more fundamental concept than a mere “discursive study of religion” (Kocku von Stuckrad (2010), “Reflections on the Limits of Reflection: An Invitation to the Discursive Study of Religion,” Method & Theory in the Study of Religion

2.2 Secularism: Diversity or dominance of Western secular modernity?

The unmistakable presence of religious expressions in many parts of the world, the occurrence of religious movements and the necessity to integrate migrants' religion in existing structures have fuelled lively debates about "secularism". As part of these debates, the equation of Europe with a coherent secular political sphere has been questioned; furthermore, references were made to the dissemination of western concepts of secularism in the context of imperial and colonial encounters, and their consequences.³⁶ Several authors have also highlighted the specifically Christian genealogy of secular approaches³⁷ and the unbreakable links between secularisation and nation building in Christian-influenced contexts.³⁸

In recent years, empirical analyses have increasingly focussed on comparing different kinds of secularism³⁹ in terms of the institutionalised relationships between politics and religion.⁴⁰ However, when using the term "secularism", some studies tend to equate social practices and institutions with the political ideologies⁴¹ that legitimise them.

This is consolidated by positions that – in conjunction with theories on governmentality – home in on secularism as discourse and consider secularism – in reference to Asad – to be a larger political project "that aims to 22/2: 156–69; Kocku von Stuckrad (2013), "Discursive Study of Religion: Approaches, Definitions, Implications," Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 25/1: 5–25), in which religion only figures as the "societal organisation of knowledge about religion" (where indicated: 17). Instead, we are seeking out the differentiation processes that have – first of all – made it possible to address religion as a "discursive constellation" (ibid.).

36 Peter van der Veer (2001), Imperial encounters: Religion and modernity in India and Britain (Princeton: Princeton University Press).

37 Asad (2003), Formations of the Secular; David Scott, and Charles Hirschkind, eds. (2006), Powers of the Secular Modern: Talal Asad and his Interlocutors (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press).

38 Peter Beyer (2013), "Questioning the Secular/Religious Divide in a Post-Westphalian World," International Sociology, 28/6: 663–79.

39 Linell E. Cady, and Elizabeth S. Hurd, eds. (2010), Comparative secularisms in a global age (New York: Palgrave Macmillan); Ahmet T. Kuru (2009), Secularism and State Policies toward Religion: The United States, France, and Turkey (Cambridge, New York: Cambridge University Press).

40 Matthias Koenig (2007), "Europäisierung von Religionspolitik: Zur institutionellen Umwelt der Anerkennungskämpfe muslimischer Migranten," in "Konfliktfeld Islam in Europa." Ed. Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Levent Tezcan. Special issue, Soziale Welt 17: 347–68.

41 Tariq Modood (2010), "Moderate Secularism, Religion as Identity and Respect for Religion," The Political Quarterly 81/1: 4–14; Saba Mahmood (2006), "Secularism, Hermeneutics, and Empire: The Politics of Islamic Reformation," Public Culture 18/2: 323–47; Veit Bader (2007), Secularism or democracy? Associational governance of religious diversity (Amsterdam: Amsterdam University Press).

establish modernity as a hegemonic ‘political goal.’⁴² However, Jakobsen and Pellegrini see the danger that a genealogical approach simply conceptualises all secularisms as an extension of European colonialism,⁴³ and in contrast highlight the genuine plurality of secularisms.

Political-theoretical objections also dispute the neutrality of the “secular” public sphere and criticise their legitimisation as ideological.⁴⁴

2.3 Multiple Secularities

The concept of *Multiple Secularities*⁴⁵ consciously goes beyond the relationship between politics and religion, in that it applies the term “secularity” to differentiations and symbolic boundaries between the religious and non-religious in general. Boundary demarcation is seen as culturally and historically bound, and thereby related to values, yet at the same time it is seen as socially contested and historically reversible. Boundary demarcation takes different forms in different societies and functions based on different cultural logics, in which the histories of social conflicts and competing norm systems manifest themselves. Such ambivalent configurations may be the result of imperial or colonial encounters, immigration or other exchange processes. As with the Multiple Modernities programme, we are also taking a threefold approach: a) cultural imprints, b) encounters with Western modernity/the Western concept of secularity and c) the handling of these encounters against the backdrop of cultural imprints. In accepting the existence of the cultural imprints of modern forms of secularity, it is 42 Janet R. Jakobsen, and Ann Pellegrini (2008), Secularisms (Durham: Duke University Press), 7.

43 Ibid., 15.

44 Bader (2007), Secularism or democracy?, 27; on India: T. N. Madan (1998), “Secularism in its place,” in Secularism and its critics. Ed. Rajeev Bhargava (New Delhi: Oxford University Press), 297–320; André Béteille (1994), “Secularism and the Intellectuals,” Economic and Political Weekly, 29/10: 559–66; Ashis Nandy (1990), “The politics of secularism and the recovery of religious tolerance,” in Mirrors of violence: Communities, riots, and survivors in South Asia. Ed. Veena Das (Delhi, New York: Oxford University Press), 321–44; Ashis Nandy (1995), „An Anti-Secularist Manifesto,“ India International Centre Quarterly 22: 35–64; criticised by Rajeev Bhargava (1998), “What is secularism for?,” in Secularism and its critics. Ed. Rajeev Bhargava (New Delhi: Oxford University Press), 486–542 and Rajeev Bhargava (2010), “The ‘Secular Ideal’ before Secularism: A Preliminary Sketch,” in Comparative secularisms in a global age. Ed. Linell E. Cady and Elizabeth S. Hurd (New York: Palgrave Macmillan), 159–80.

45 Wohlrab-Sahr, and Burchardt (2012), “Multiple Secularities: Toward a Cultural Sociology of Secular Modernities”; Marian Burchardt, and Monika Wohlrab-Sahr (2013), “Von Multiple Modernities zu Multiple Secularities: kulturelle Diversität, Säkularismus und Toleranz als Leitidee in Indien,” Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie 38/4: 355–74.

necessary to pursue their historical roots. This is where our project comes into play and where we want to fill a gap in the existing research.

Secularities – based on our assumption – resort to specific societal reference problems and present “solutions” to these problems that are perpetuated in the cultural memory⁴⁶ and are invoked defensively in the case of irritations. A distinction is drawn between four problem areas: (1) The problem of individual freedom in contrast to dominating social entities, be it groups or the state; (2) the problem of religious heterogeneity and the potential for conflict or actual conflict; (3) the related problem of societal or national integration and development; and (4) the problem of autonomous development of societal sub-domains.⁴⁷ Taking reference problems into account for these kinds of boundary demarcation is also central when researching pre-modern societies. One might also speak of the “dominant societal experience”⁴⁸, which is related to variations of secularity. The HCAS’ work will show whether further reference problems need to be added to those listed above.

Based on our assumptions, in order to become dominant, the stated motives of secularity must be combined with guiding ideas, which set the basic terms for differentiation in a given context, and therefore push other motives to the background. However, guiding ideas may also openly conflict with one another. Secular guiding ideas can certainly not be presupposed for pre-modern societies, but certain elements may exist, upon which guiding ideas of secularity in the context of a globalised modern era fall back.⁴⁹ These kinds of genealogies of societal guiding ideas will be part of the shared research.

3 Question and central research aims

The planned HCAS’ cooperative, interdisciplinary research will look for emic taxonomies, forms of social differentiation and intracultural boundary demarcation. We assume that these are included in, and form prerequisites for dealing with, modern “Western” concepts of differentiation between religious and secular practices, discourses and institutions. Finally, we are interested in the resulting path dependencies that shape current 46 Jan Assmann (1992), Das kulturelle Gedächtnis: Schrift, Erinnerung und politische Identität in frühen Hochkulturen (München: Beck).

47 If Wolfgang Eßbach (2014), Religionssoziologie 1: Glaubenskrieg und Revolution als Wiege neuer Religionen (Paderborn: Fink) considers both the war of religion and revolution as a cradle for new religions, this can also apply to a typology of secularities.

48 Ibid., 21.

49 See Bhargava (2010), “The ‘Secular Ideal’ before Secularism.”

forms of secularity in different regions.

The HCAS tries to fulfil three main aims: (1) To identify and describe boundary demarcation and differentiation processes in different regions and epochs from a comparative perspective, and to analyse them considering the protagonists, action contexts, purposes and media; (2) to research the effects of boundary demarcation on (and their relevance for) the handling of modern “Western” concepts of secularity; (3) to record references to emic norm systems and taxonomies in arguments and strategies found in current or recent boundary demarcation debates.

Whether the differentiations and classifications in the researched cultures are to be considered as structural analogies and/or functional equivalents for modern boundary demarcation between religion and non-religion can only be clarified in the research process and the intense exchange among researchers.

The adequateness of theories, terminologies and methods must also be proven in the course of the research process. The research field must initially be defined, for which the fellows’ expertise in this area is vital. However, a terminological and theoretical framework for the discussions in the HCAS, which provides a preliminary structure for more specific research questions, is required. Since differentiation and boundary demarcation processes are the HCAS’ central research problem, we are using established theories on social differentiation to describe our framework. Without limiting ourselves to one particular theory, it seems almost inevitable that system-oriented approaches become relatively prominent. Subject to this caveat, we want to formulate a few general premises and hypotheses. Within these premises and hypotheses, the pre-modern non-European world is necessarily over-represented since its exploration represents a large part of the originality of the research project, but at the same time this needs to be justified. The prominence of the pre-modern does not reflect the focus of the specific research projects, but we will always apply any resulting fundamental questions to projects that relate to the modern era.

When selecting the regions to research, we have opted for the greatest possible contrast, even if the implied polarity would hardly stand up to an empirical test. We will focus on East Asia (particularly China and Japan), South Asia (India and Sri Lanka) and South-East Asia (Indonesia), as well as (going beyond geographical spatial concepts) an ensemble of states, cultures and regions referred to, with many reservations, as the “Islamic World”. Indonesia, largely influenced by Islam, and India with its large Islamic minority are important overlapping areas. As perceived by the public, East Asia and the “Islamic World” are forming two poles in relation to secularisation and secularity – and are often cited as examples for the problems of transcultural transference of the religious/secular dual.⁵⁰ For instance, to some extent, Islamic theologians of the researched regions, the media, and also scholars of Islam, presuppose an unbreakable link between religion, politics and law. They consider Islam as a “way of life”⁵¹ in a variety of cultures, and deem concepts of secularity to be inadequate, a Western incursion, or even suspect it of atheism.⁵² In contrast, other specialists explicitly apply concepts of differentiation to the history of Islam⁵³. In comparison, China and Japan appear to be extremely secularised,⁵⁴ but there

-
- 50 On Japan: Ichirō Hori 堀一郎 (1975), Sei to zoku no kattō 聖と俗の葛藤. Tokio: Heibonsha; Max Eger (1980). “‘Modernization’ and ‘Secularization’ in Japan A Polemical Essay,” Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 7/1: 7–24; Fitzgerald, for example (2003) „Religion and the Secular in Japan“, and (2010), Religion and the Secular: Historical and Colonial Formations (London: Equinox); Mitsutoshi Horii (2016). „Critical Reflections on the Religious-Secular Dichotomy in Japan,“ in Making religion. Theory and practice in the discursive study of religion. Ed. by Frans Wijsen, and Kocku von Stuckrad (Leiden: Brill), 260–86; criticised by: Ian Reader (2004), “Ideology, Academic Inventions and Mystical Anthropology: Responding to Fitzgerald’s Errors and Misguided Polemics,” electronic journal of contemporary japanese studies. <http://www.japanesestudies.org.uk/discussion-papers/Reader.html>, last accessed 8 April 2015; Christoph Kleine (2013), “Religion and the Secular in Premodern Japan from the Viewpoint of Systems Theory,” Journal of Religion in Japan 2/1: 1–34.
- 51 John L. Esposito (2000), “Islam and Secularism in the Twenty-First Century,” in Islam and Secularism in the Middle East. Ed. John L. Esposito, and Azzam Tamimi (London: Hurst & Company), 11.
- 52 See Daniel Kinitz (2015), “Deviance as Phenomenon of Secularity: Islam and Deviants in Twentieth-century Egypt—A Search for Sociological Explanations,” in Multiple Secularities Beyond the West: Religion and Modernity in the Global Age. Ed. Marian Burchardt, Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Matthias Middell (Boston: De Gruyter, 2015), 97–119.
- 53 Ira M. Lapidus (1975), “The Separation of State and Religion in the Development of Early Islamic Society,” International Journal of Middle East Studies 6/4: 363–85; Ira M. Lapidus (1992), “The Golden Age: The Political Concepts of Islam,” Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 524: 13–25; Ira M. Lapidus (1996), “State and Religion in Islamic Societies,” Past & Present 151: 3–27; Reinhard Schulze (1994), Geschichte der islamischen Welt im 20. Jahrhundert (München: Beck).
- 54 For Japan, see: Inglehart, and Baker (2000), „Modernization, Cultural Change, and the Persistence of Traditional Values“; Peter L. Berger (1983), “Secularity: West and East,” in Cultural Identity and Modernization in Asian Countries: Proceedings of Kokugakuin University Centennial Symposium. Edited by Kokugakuin University. <http://www2.kokugakuin.ac.jp/ijcc/wp/cimac/berger.html>, last accessed 6 April, 2015; Ian Reader (2012), “Secularisation RIP? Nonsense! The ‘rush hour away from the gods’ and the decline of religion in contemporary Japan,” The Journal of Religion in Japan 1/1: 1–39; John Nelson (2012), “Japanese Secularities and the Decline of Temple Buddhism,” Journal of Religion in Japan 1/1: 37–60.

are also weighty dissenting voices here, particularly in relation to Japan.⁵⁵ Since the reforms in the 1980s, an intensification of religious life has also been observed in China in parallel with accelerated modernisation.⁵⁶ Even in Taiwan, authoritarian secularism coming to an end in the late 1980s has led to dynamic progress and a reclassification of the relationship between religious and secular actors.⁵⁷ Both in China and Japan, the boundary demarcation between religion and tradition is the subject of intense negotiation processes. On the other hand, Indian scholars create a link between secularity and the practice of tolerance, which dates back to the third century B.C., and thereby make secularity indigenously.⁵⁸ However, it remains highly controversial in its political and legal institutionalisation as secularism.⁵⁹ Only a general reference can be made here to the nuanced debate about the different regions.

All regions should be researched as outlined above in relation to the current forms of secularity and in a diachronic perspective, in view of historical conditions and path dependencies, as well as intercultural entanglements. In doing so, we are entering new academic territory and going beyond the horizon of a secularisation debate that uses the Western modern era as blueprint.

This research project is original in that the fundamental problem of differentiating between religious and secular cultural segments, institutions, discourses, practices, spheres of activity, etc., is to be studied by a large number of internationally renowned experts in a systematically compar-

55 Horace N. McFarland (1967), The Rush Hour of the Gods: A Study of New Religious Movements in Japan (New York: MacMillan); Casanova (1994), Public Religions in the Modern World; Rodney Stark (1999), "Secularization, R.I.P.," Sociology of Religion 60/3: 249–73; Cox, and Swyngedouw (2000), "The Myth of the Twentieth Century".

56 Vincent Goossaert, and David A. Palmer (2011), The religious question in modern China (Chicago, London: University of Chicago Press).

57 André Laliberté (2004), The politics of Buddhist organizations in Taiwan, 1989–2000 (New York, London: RoutledgeCurzon); Richard Madsen (2007), Democracy's dharma: Religious renaissance and political development in Taiwan (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press); Cheng-tian Kuo (2008), Religion and democracy in Taiwan (Albany: State University of New York Press).

58 Romila Thapar (2007), "Is Secularism Alien To Indian Civilization?," in The Future of Secularism. Ed. T. N. Srinivasan (New Delhi, New York: Oxford University Press), 83–108; Bhargava (2010), "The 'Secular Ideal' before Secularism."

59 Shabnum Tejani (2008), Indian secularism: A social and intellectual history, 1890–1950 (Bloomington: Indiana University Press); Ashis Nandy (1998), "The Politics of Secularism and the Recovery of Religious Tolerance," in Secularism and its critics. Ed. Rajeev Bhargava (New Delhi: Oxford University Press), 321–79; Madan (1998), "Secularism in its place"; P. R. de Souza (2012), "Through the Lense of a Constitutional Republic. The Case of the Controversial Textbook," Economic & Political Weekly 47/22: 14–17, et al.

tive manner, and with the greatest possible depth of historical focus. In contrast with the majority of seemingly related projects, we go beyond the narrowing of scope, which results from focussing on the process of secularisation as a consequence or by-product of (Western) modernisation.⁶⁰ For us, the “Western experience” of secularisation and modernisation does not set the global benchmark for societal developments. We would rather start from the historical experiences of the researched regions, and analyse their own courses of development.

3.1 Premises and hypotheses

The HCAS’ basic concept initially depends on a collection of premises and hypotheses, which will operate in a theoretical field of diverging positions, and are partially represented by designated fellows. At the same time, the HCAS cannot limit itself to paradigms and perspectives set up in advance, if it is to enable an open-ended research process. In this research process, it must first be specified whether certain boundary demarcations are to be interpreted as references to a differentiation of “the religious” in a given society, and what consequences these boundary demarcations had on implementing culturally specific types of “secularity” in contention with Western concepts of norm systems.

The assumptions and hypotheses set out below therefore serve as points of reference, from which the HCAS’ work can begin, and create a framework for discussing research questions relating to specific examples.

(1) Internal social differentiation. One of the HCAS’ central hypotheses is that boundary demarcation between the religious and non-religious is not an exclusive sign of “modernity” or “the western world”. We assume that every society in history knows variations of internal differentiation. It is hardly plausible to imagine so-called “high cultures” outside Europe to be a “great enchanted garden”⁶¹, in which all practice and communication was “religious”.⁶² On the other hand, as Stausberg has pointed out, “not all

60 The project set out here is not in competition with the “Religion and Secularism” programme led by Charles Taylor at the Institut für die Wissenschaften vom Menschen (the Institute for Human Sciences) in Vienna, since that programme does not focus on comparative research in the narrower sense and is also limited to modern globalisation processes. Even the basic theoretical nature of our project differs significantly from the project in Vienna.

61 Max Weber (1988), „Die asiatische Sekten- und Heilandsreligiosität,“ in Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Religionssoziologie 2. Ed. Marianne Weber (Tübingen: Mohr), 278.

62 Niklas Luhmann (2000), Die Religion der Gesellschaft. Ed. André Kieserling (Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp), 187; c.f. Hartmann Tyrell (2008), “Religiöse Kommunikation:

religious communication or affairs are necessarily part of religions.”⁶³ This means that we distinguish between the adjective “religious” and the noun “religion(s)”, whereby the latter presupposes a certain degree of organisation, through which religious communication is perpetuated and channelled. In this context, Stausberg suggests distinguishing between three stages of differentiation processes: (1) attributive differentiation – differentiation of certain facts as religious; (2) structural differentiation – differentiation of religions in an institutional sense; (3) functional differentiation – differentiation of religion as a social sub-system. It needs to be discussed whether the term secularity should be reserved for the last two differentiations or even only for the functional differentiation. The aim is not to presuppose “religion” as a “life order” with specific autonomy (Weber) or as a distinct “autopoietic functional system” with specific codes and functions (Luhmann) in pre-modern contexts. It is important, however, to ask questions: Which issues, situations, roles and institutions are differentiated under certain conditions in specific historic contexts? In what sense do they provide the basis for the differentiation of religion as a distinct and institutionalised culture segment, which is perceived by people in the modern era as being relatively distinct from secular “cultural subject areas”⁶⁴, spheres of action⁶⁵ or social sub-systems? Therefore, the crucial question for us is whether and under which conditions a type of social differentiation is conceptualised, in which the economy, politics, law, science, art, etc., as an entity opposes another entity (religion), and attributes to itself a shared quality (secular) relative to religion as its other. It seems reasonable to speak of secularity in the full sense only if the multiplicity of cultural segments is conceptualised as a duality: religious segments of culture on one side and non-religious, i.e. secular, segments of culture on the other.

(2) Taxonomies, classifications and knowledge systems. Furthermore, we also assume that every society develops taxonomies to organise a hyper-complex world by classifying natural and cultural facts in an abstract manner in order to provide orientation within this world. The cognitive-, Auge, Ohr und Medienvielfalt,” in Soziale und gesellschaftliche Differenzierung: Aufsätze zur soziologischen Theorie. Ed. Bettina Heintz et al. (Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften), 251–314.

63 Michael Stausberg (2010), „Distinctions, Differentiations, Ontology, and Non-humans in Theories of Religion,” Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 22: 359.

64 Franz X. Landmesser (1926). Die Eigengesetzlichkeit der Kultursachgebiete: Ein Beitrag zum Problem 'Religion und Kultur' (Köln: Oratoriums-Verlag).

65 Richard Münch (2011), “Strukturen: Die Ausdifferenzierung und Institutionalisierung von Handlungsräumen,” in Handbuch der Kulturwissenschaften. 1: Grundlagen und Schlüsselbegriffe. Ed. Friedrich Jaeger et al. (Stuttgart, Weimar: Metzler), 173–89.

normative-, and also aesthetic- and affection-oriented⁶⁶ taxonomies that are consolidated in specific knowledge systems differ significantly from culture to culture and epoch to epoch, and vary in their societal relevance. However, as their range of variation is limited by biological and cognitive prerequisites, structurally similar ordering principles should be anticipated. Historically speaking, it is mostly religious actors and institutions that set the classification rules and turn taxonomies into a “symbolic universe”⁶⁷ with a high degree of obligation. In this context, Sheehan⁶⁸ for example, points towards the “social function” of religion “as a tool for making distinctions”. From the point of view of systems theory, the differentiation of a religious sub-system introduces a new type of fundamental classification – the *religious-secular divide*⁶⁹ that is constitutive of modern societies: the “modern ‘secular-religious’ system of classification.”⁷⁰ It is finally established in Europe as a result of (1) the appraisal of pre-Christian antiquity during the Renaissance, (2) the experience with confessional plurality and strife following the Reformation and (3) the encounter with cultures outside Europe as part of European “discoveries” since the 17th century, together with the need to raise an inventory as a result of these discoveries.⁷¹ It is undeniable that Western types of norm system, knowledge systems, taxonomies (e.g. differentiations between religious and secular) and institutions – partly developed as a result of encounters with other cultures! – have largely been established globally and have therefore become “an unavoidable reference in local processes of identity development.”⁷² However, it is crucial to question a perspective on historical influence that assumes a unilateral transfer without taking the involvement of societies outside Europe in this process into account. More appropriately, the perspective of 66 Thomas Schwinn (1998), “Wertsphären, Lebensordnungen und Lebensführungen,” in Verantwortliches Handeln in gesellschaftlichen Ordnungen: Beiträge zu Wolfgang Schluchters Religion und Lebensführung. Ed. Agathe Bienfait, and Gerhard Wagner (Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp), 294.

67 Peter L. Berger, and Thomas Luckmann (1966), „Secularization and Pluralism,“ Internationales Jahrbuch für Religionssoziologie 2: 73–86.

68 Jonathan Sheehan (2006), “Sacred and Profane: Idolatry, Antiquarianism and the Polemics of Distinction in the Seventeenth Century,” Past & Present 192/1: 58.

69 Beyer (2013), “Questioning the Secular/Religious Divide”.

70 José Casanova (2012), “Religion, the Axial Age, and Secular Modernity in Bellah’s Theory of Religious Evolution,” in The Axial Age and Its Consequences. Ed. Robert N. Bellah, and Hans Joas (Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press), 212.

71 Guy G. Stroumsa (2010), A new science: The discovery of religion in the Age of Reason (Cambridge: Harvard University Press), viii; also see Sheehan (2006), “Sacred and Profane”.

72 Michael Bergunder (2011), “Was ist Religion? Kulturwissenschaftliche Überlegungen zum Gegenstand der Religionswissenschaft,” Zeitschrift für Religionswissenschaft 19/1-2: 54.

“entangled histories” is developing, which takes selective, reflective, strategic and interest-driven acquisition into account, which has often led to cultural “hybridities” and multiple identities, and resulted in important (often conflict-torn) dynamics. One practical option to compare emic taxonomies would be to research old encyclopaedias, such as pre-modern Chinese or Arabian examples.

(3) Codes and differentiations. A further hypothesis to examine would be whether and how far basic emic taxonomies correlate with binary codes of a mostly evaluative character. It would be important to examine whether and under which circumstances these codes develop into specific guiding ideas for the differentiation of societal sub-systems. It is evident that binary codes such as sacred/profane, pure/impure, extra-worldly/inner-worldly, good/evil, familiar/unfamiliar, etc., are ubiquitous. They are not only relevant as normative and cognitive forms of classification, but also have an impact on the social structures long before a primacy of functional system differentiation is established – if this happens at all. In Buddhism, for example, a basic differentiation between laukika (belonging to the world) and lokottara (supramundane) emerges early on.⁷³ Based on the Indian model – and comparable with the “Zweischwerterlehre” (in Early Medieval Christianity) and Luther’s “Two Kingdoms Theory” – it was further developed in medieval Japan into a model of dual sovereignty under an “Order of Princes” (ōbō) and an “Order of Buddha” (buppō), thereby becoming relevant to societal structure.⁷⁴ A comparable dual structural concept may also be found in old India with complementary judicial spheres that are based on two normative codes: Arthaśāstra and Dharmaśāstra.⁷⁵ We assume that certain taxonomies and codes are constitutive of the emergence of a distinct religious system – firstly, and above all, vis-a-vis the domain

73 David Seyfort Ruegg (1995), Ordre spirituel et ordre temporel dans la pensée bouddhique de l’Inde et du Tibet: Quatre conférences au collège de France (Paris: Collège de France, Institut de civilisation indienne; Diffusion De Boccard) and (2001), “A Note on the Relationship between Buddhist and ‘Hindu’ Divinities in Buddhist Literature and Iconology: The laukika/lokottara Contrast and the Notion of an Indian ‘Religious Substratum,’” in Le parole e i marmi. Studi in onore di Raniero Gnoli nel suo 70. Ed. Raniero Gnoli, Raffaele Torella, and Claudio Cicuzza (Rom: Istituto italiano per l’Africa e l’Oriente; Herder International Book Centre), 735–742.

74 Kleine (2013), “Religion and the Secular in Premodern Japan” and (2013), “Religion als begriffliches Konzept und soziales System im vormodernen Japan: Polythetische Klassen, semantische und funktionale Äquivalente und strukturelle Analogien,” in Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Ed. Peter Schalk et al. (Uppsala: Uppsala Universitet), 225–92.

75 Tomthy Lubin (2007), “Punishment and Expiation: Overlapping Domains in Brahmanical Law,” Indologica Taurinensia 33: 93–122; John D. M. Derret (1976), “Rajadharma,” The Journal of Asian Studies 35/4: 597–609.

of political rule, but implicitly also beyond that. To operationalise our concept of secularity, it is necessary to explore specific codes and differentiations that structure communication in pre-modern cultures. Even if these cultures have no semantic equivalents for the terms religious and secular, such codes may allow and/or advance a boundary demarcation between religion and non-religion. In this regard, a critical evaluation should also be made of Casanova's thesis⁷⁶ on the cultural evolution of binary codes, according to which the central differentiation for pre-axial cultures is the distinction between sacred and profane, whereas for axial cultures the basic distinction is between transcendent and immanent, and for modern cultures between religious and secular. Again, the question arises: What significance does the formulation of a concept of transcendence – and the transcendence/immanence dual – have on the classification of the world into a religious and a secular sphere?

(4) Social functions. In every society, certain functions must be fulfilled to ensure the continued existence of that society. When differentiating religion vis-a-vis secular segments of cultures, two basic functions are particularly significant. They can roughly be categorised as (a) “coping with contingency” and (b) “reality construction”.⁷⁷ “Coping with contingency”⁷⁸ includes functions such as protection against war, epidemics, natural disasters, etc., but also on an individual level encompasses ensuring prosperity, health, (male) offspring, and many more. “Reality construction” relates 76 Casanova (2012), “Religion, the Axial Age, and Secular Modernity”: 191, 200.

77 Peter L. Berger, and Thomas Luckmann (1969), Die gesellschaftliche Konstruktion der Wirklichkeit: Eine Theorie der Wissenssoziologie (Frankfurt am Main: Fischer Taschenbuch Verlag).

78 Generally, religious studies, sociology and theology speak of “managing contingency” (Luhmann (1977), Funktion der Religion, 231, and (2013), A systems theory of religion (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press); Nobert Ammermann (2000), Religiosität und Kontingenzbewältigung: Empirische und konstrukttheoretische Umsetzungen für Religionspädagogik und Seelsorge (Münster: LIT); Franz Gruber (2012), “Glaube als Kontingenzbewältigung,” Theologisch-praktische Quartalschrift 160: 381–91; Klaus Herbers, ed. (2014), Unterwegs im Namen der Religion/On the Road in the Name of Religion: Pilgern als Form von Kontingenzbewältigung und Zukunftssicherung in den Weltreligionen / Pilgrimage as a Means of Coping with Contingency and Fixing the Future in the World's Major Religions (Stuttgart: Steiner); Hans-Ludwig Ollig (1988), “Kontingenzbewältigung angesichts der Sinnfrage. Überlegungen zum gesellschaftlichen Ort von Religion,” in Tradition und Innovation: XIII. Deutscher Kongress für Philosophie, Bonn, 24.-29. September 1984. Ed. Wolfgang Kluxen, and Tilman Borsche (Hamburg: Meiner), 513–21). However, the term suggests that the problem of contingency could actually be overcome, which is certainly doubtful. Coping with contingency may appear to be a symbolic (theoretical) undertaking at first glance, but if you consider the effort made in ritual practice to defeat social threats, its practical nature becomes immediately apparent.

to the provision of a “semantic apparatus”⁷⁹ to interpret the world and to create “plausibility structures”⁸⁰ for implementing a socially binding reality construction. In particular, it also refers to the legitimisation of political power and pre-existing social conditions⁸¹ – what Weber referred to as “domestication of the masses”. There are significant cultural differences with regard to the institutions, actors and practices that are expected to fulfil these functions. Classic secularisation theories assume that “religion” was principally expected to fulfil these functions in pre-modern societies, but that it is increasingly released from most tasks over the course of social evolution, and could and should now be limited to its primary function. In this regard, the first question is whether certain social functions (or even purposes) are identified as being specifically “religious” since it is evident that religions do not differ from secular segments of society simply due to their specific functions. Only those religions designated as “axial” (with reference to Jaspers) by Bellah, Eisenstadt et al.⁸² with a concept of absolute transcendence,⁸³ in which “the aim of religious behaviour is ‘irrationalised’”⁸⁴, postulate an exceptional position in view of “coping with contingency”, inasmuch as they promise to ultimately overcome any contingency.⁸⁵ However, even “axial” religions (in the sense of religious institutions) fulfil a range of functions that could also be adopted by other sub-systems. It may be useful to examine whether the difference between 79 Niklas Luhmann (1993), Gesellschaftsstruktur und Semantik: Studien zur Wissenssoziologie der modernen Gesellschaft Band 1 (Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp), 19.

80 Berger, and Luckmann (1969), Die gesellschaftliche Konstruktion der Wirklichkeit, 165–170.

81 Pierre Bourdieu (2011), “Die Auflösung des Religiösen,” in Religion. By Pierre Bourdieu (Berlin: Suhrkamp), 243–49.

82 Shmuel N. Eisenstadt (1980), The axial age, rise of transcendental visions, the emergence of intellectuals and of clerics, and the structuring of world history (Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem); Shmuel N. Eisenstadt (1986), The Origins and diversity of axial age civilizations (Albany: SUNY Press); Shmuel N. Eisenstadt (1987), Kulturen der Achsenzeit: Ihre Ursprünge und ihre Vielfalt (Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp); Shmuel N. Eisenstadt (2005), “Axial civilizations and the Axial Age Reconsidered,” in Axial Civilizations and World History. Ed. Jóhann P. Árnason, Shmuel N. Eisenstadt, and Björn Wittrock (Leiden: Brill), 531–64; Robert N. Bellah, and Hans Joas, eds. (2012), The Axial Age and Its Consequences (Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press); Casanova (2012), “Religion, the Axial Age, and Secular Modernity”.

83 Christoph Kleine (2012), “Zur Universalität der Unterscheidung religiös/säkular: Eine systemtheoretische Betrachtung,” in Religionswissenschaft: Ein Studienbuch. Ed. Michael Stausberg (Berlin: De Gruyter), 65–80 and (2013), “Religion als begriffliches Konzept und soziales System”.

84 Max Weber (1980), Wirtschaft und Gesellschaft: Grundriss der verstehenden Soziologie. Ed. Johannes Winkelmann (Tübingen: Mohr), 259.

85 Kleine (2013), “Religion als begriffliches Konzept und soziales System”.

religious and worldly fulfilment of functions manifests itself mainly in the means applied – for example, communication with transcendent powers. Of particular interest would be historical situations, where a struggle for responsibility for fulfilling certain social functions was evident, or where expectations for fulfilling functions were explicitly placed on certain segments of society.

3.2 Sub-questions

The following sub-questions serve to operationalise the concept of Multiple Secularities. Furthermore, they should also provide a general focus, thereby facilitating communication between the fellows, without excluding other perspectives and questions. On the contrary, developing new questions is the HCAS' stated aim.

3.2.1 Emic norm systems, differentiation practices and paths of development

This sub-question focuses on the synchronous and diachronic comparative study of differentiation processes in various historical contexts. Inter alia, indigenous taxonomic categories will be explored, with the aid of which people in different pre-modern societies have gained an understanding of a complex natural and social world, by subsuming concrete situations under abstract terms of classification, thereby creating a conceptual system. Such occasions could include topics and types of communication, social practices, roles, authorities, institutions, locations and times, but also material goods and general norm systems. In this regard, it is also relevant to explore the functions and socio-structural consequences of binary codes, such as worldly/extra-worldly, sacred/profane, pure/impure, wholesome/unwholesome. Furthermore, it should be questioned whether certain social functions were classified and subjected to discussion, and whether their fulfilment was assigned to specific actors or institutions. Further (exemplary) questions could include: Was a distinction drawn between different “finite provinces of meaning” and were they integrated into a “symbolic universe”⁸⁶, and who were their initiators, advocates and facilitators? Did people assume multiple modes of reality⁸⁷? In the examined pre-modern

86 Berger, and Luckmann (1969), Die gesellschaftliche Konstruktion der Wirklichkeit, 102.

87 On multiple realities: Alfred Schütz (1945), “On Multiple Realities,” Philosophy and Phenomenological Research 5/4: 533–76.

societies, are competing “spheres of values”⁸⁸ already developing and on which values are they based? Are these spheres of values solidifying as “life-orders” with a high regulatory claim? Is there a distinction between different social “fields”, each with their own logic, habitus, and other signs of distinction and specific types of symbolic capital⁸⁹? Are “spheres of action” with their own guiding ideas and standards of rationality detached “from the clutches of community bonds [...] and the ethics of brotherhood” – and therefore detached also from “religion”.⁹⁰ Or is it even possible to identify trends of differentiation of social sub-systems, which differ from others with regard to their social function, specific codes, own “contingency formulae”, etc.⁹¹? At the same time, it must always be asked what could hinder or oppose these differentiation processes.

The HCAS’ empirical work and discussions will show whether there are criteria based on which the differentiated and classified segments of culture, practices, themes, situations, roles, institutions, etc., can be attributed as “religious”, in order for the “secular” to become identifiable.

3.2.2 Reference problems of differentiation and boundary demarcation processes

Taking it a step further, the next question would be to ask whether the identified processes of differentiation and boundary demarcation, as well as forms of dissociation by certain actors, respond to certain social or cultural problems, and what interests are pursued with them. As part of the concept of *Multiple Secularities*⁹² that initially focused on the modern era, four typical reference problems were identified as occasions for the institutionalisation of “secularity”. It cannot be assumed that all four reference problems occurred in equal measure in pre-modern societies, however, it should not be ruled out that there were comparable problem constellations

88 Max Weber (1988), “Zwischenbetrachtung: Theorie der Stufen und Richtungen religiöser Weltablehnung,” in Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Religionssoziologie 1. Ed. Marianne Weber (Tübingen: Mohr), 536–72.

89 Pierre Bourdieu (1997), “Zur Genese der Begriffe Habitus und Feld,” in Der Tote packt den Lebenden: Pierre Bourdieu – Schriften zu Politik & Kultur. Ed. Margareta Steinrück (Hamburg: VSA), 59–78.

90 Münch (2011), “Strukturen”, 174.

91 Niklas Luhmann, for example: (1991), Soziale Systeme: Grundriß einer allgemeinen Theorie (Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp).

92 Wohlrab-Sahr, and Burchardt (2011), “Vielfältige Säkularitäten“ and (2012), “Multiple Secularities: Toward a Cultural Sociology of Secular Modernities”; Burchardt, Wohlrab-Sahr, and Middell (2015), Multiple Secularities Beyond the West.

in earlier cultures.⁹³ At any rate, it is debatable whether the modern era actually represents such a radical historical watershed as suggested by the self-perception of societies considering themselves to be modern, and it should not be presupposed here.⁹⁴ Instead, we rather assume that, in addition to natural factors, social and institutional structures also occasionally have a longue durée, and stretch far back into the past. Even in pre-modern societies, such as in India, China or Japan, belonging to a religion – in the context of Buddhism for example – was sometimes a personal decision,⁹⁵ which presumed a minimum level of individual (religious) freedom in addition to religious plurality, which may in turn have required a minimum level of religious neutrality for state institutions.⁹⁶ On the other hand, in the so-called “high cultures” with a predominantly stratified type of differentiation, there was a considerable need for cultural integration through canonisation, for example.⁹⁷ While canonisation can and is meant to have an integrating, standardising and homogenising effect, the result promotes socio-structural boundaries. This is the case, for example, when religious institutions are used for the external legitimisation of political authority and as producers of a semantic apparatus for a binding interpretation of the world. Or – on the contrary – when universalised validity claims from “religious” institutions collide with the sovereignty claims of “worldly” rulers. And finally, it must also be assumed for societies that are not pre-

93 See Christoph Kleine (2009), “Pluralismus und Pluralität in der japanischen Religionsgeschichte: Am Beispiel nonkonformer buddhistischer Bewegungen des 13. Jahrhunderts,” in Mauss, Buddhismus, Devianz: Festschrift für Heinz Mürmel zum 65. Geburtstag. Ed. Thomas Hase et al. (Marburg: Diagonal Verlag), 189–216; Bhargava (2010), “The ‘Secular Ideal’ before Secularism”, for example.

94 Hubert Seiwert (1995), “Religion in der Geschichte der Moderne,” Zeitschrift für Religionswissenschaft 3/1: 91–101.

95 Cf. Helmut Zander (2016), “Europäische“ Religionsgeschichte: Religiöse Zugehörigkeit durch Entscheidung – Konsequenzen im interkulturellen Vergleich. (Berlin, Boston: De Gruyter Oldenbourg); Ulrike Roesler (2013), „Die Lehre, der Weg und die namenlose Religion: Mögliche Äquivalente eines Religionsbegriffs in der tibetischen Kultur,“ in Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Ed. Peter Schalk et al. (Uppsala: Uppsala Universität), 129–150.

96 Hubert Seiwert (2013), “Die Säkularität des konfuzianischen Staates und das Böckenförde-Dilemma,” in Anvertraute Worte: Festschrift Helwig Schmidt-Glintzer zum 65. Geburtstag. Ed. Susanne Rode-Breymann, and Achim Mittag (Hannover: Wehrhahn), 193–207; Kleine (2009), “Pluralismus und Pluralität in der japanischen Religionsgeschichte”.

97 Alois Hahn (1987), “Kanonisierungsstile,” in Kanon und Zensur: Beiträge zur Archäologie der literarischen Kommunikation. Ed. Aleida and Jan Assmann (München: Fink), 28–37; for China, also see Hubert Seiwert (1987), “Religion und kulturelle Integration in China: Die Sinisierung Fujians und die Integration in die chinesische Nationalkultur,” Saeculum 38: 225–65.

dominantly functionally differentiated that religious interventions may be blocked in terms of efficient, purposefully rational practice within certain fields of action (politics, economy, science, etc.). We assume that a distinction was also drawn in pre-modern societies between “extraordinary” and “ordinary” procedural logics and rationalities, but we expect other reference problems to have caused boundary demarcations in these societies. One of the HCAS’ tasks is to identify these kinds of reference problems. From a comparative perspective, the focus would be on solving patterns or dominant reference problems that repeatedly occur in different contexts, by having sharper boundary demarcations between religious and secular in areas of society and fields of practice.

3.2.3 Guiding ideas of Secularity

While in some world regions (e.g. India, USA, Western Europe, Turkey, Japan), explicit guiding ideas of secularity have been implemented as part of establishing the nation state or constitution, differentiations in other regions remain more implicit due to their controversial authoritarian implementation (e.g. Tunisia, Iraq, Syria), or are suspected of being secular or atheist (e.g. in various countries influenced by Islam) and are seen to be deviant if they are propagated in public.⁹⁸

Explicitly formulated secular guiding ideas in pre-modern contexts should not be readily assumed, nor should they be excluded. As an example, traces of secularist guiding ideas may be deduced from arguments using in anti-Buddhist propaganda,⁹⁹ as formulated in China in Xun Ji’s Lun fojiao biao in the 6th century. It would also be of interest whether traces of guiding ideas helping to separate religious and non-religious scopes can be found in the non-conformist positions of certain actors. In late medieval Japan, for example, the leader of the Honganji temple who was powerful yet under suspicion of subversion – Rennyo (1415-99) – emphasised the sole responsibility of Buddhist institutions for extra-worldly spiritual good and the religious orthodoxy, but inversely emphasised the absolute validity of the state authorities in regard to setting and implementing worldly legal norms. The reference problem here was the ensuring of individual religious freedom whilst also recognising the role of state sovereignty in all worldly affairs with the purpose of establishing peace in the country –

98 Kinitz (2015), “Deviance as a Phenomenon of Secularity”.

99 See Kenneth K. S. Ch’en (1952), “Anti-Buddhist Propaganda During The Nan-ch’ao,” Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, 15/1-2: 166-92 and (1972), Buddhism in China: A historical survey (Princeton: Princeton University Press).

in this regard, traces of the guiding ideas of individual freedom, national integration and functional differentiation can be recognised here. Furthermore, it should be examined whether or how current guiding ideas – such as in India – are related to pre-colonial practices and ideas.¹⁰⁰ In doing so, we are not interested in simple continuities, but rather in the reconstruction of references, cross-references, histories of memory, etc., whereby we assume that differentiation processes that consolidate into guiding ideas, generate a certain cultural dynamic.

It should be examined whether certain Asian societies in the modern era (particularly India, China and Japan) were able to affiliate to indigenous concepts or even guiding ideas that, whilst not congruent with those of Western modernity,¹⁰¹ but may have made their creative adaptation easier or even made it possible in the first place. In this regard, it is also necessary to question whether the form of social differentiation (stratified or functional) or the differentiation of religion (structural or functional) influenced the development of guiding ideas of secularity.

And finally, the sequence of differentiation processes and their programmatic formulation should also be examined. For example, Lapidus¹⁰² argued that it was within the sphere of influence of early Islam, that de-facto differentiations in opposition to the religious guiding ideas developed first, to which a socio-political theory then reacted.¹⁰³

3.2.4 Types of cultural interaction and acquisition, transfer and entanglement

In conjunction with this question, the perspective of shared, connected or entangled history, histoire croisée, transfer or relational history¹⁰⁴ are of

100 Bhargava (2010), “The ‘Secular Ideal’ before Secularism.”

101 Thapar (2007), “Is Secularism Alien To Indian Civilization?”; Bhargava (2010), “The ‘Secular Ideal’ before Secularism”; Gungwu Wang (2001), The Future of Secular Values. <http://essays.ssrc.org/10yearsafter911/the-future-of-secular-values/>, last accessed 26 April 2015 and (2003), “Secular China,” China Report 39/3 (2003): 305–21; Kleine (2013), “Religion als begriffliches Konzept und soziales System”.

102 Lapidus (1975), “The Separation of State and Religion”.

103 Lapidus (1992), “The Golden Age”. For the co-existence of different discourses in the history of Islam also see Bauer’s study “The Culture of Ambiguity” (Thomas Bauer (2011), Die Kultur der Ambiguität: Eine andere Geschichte des Islams (Berlin: Verlag der Weltreligionen)).

104 Sebastian Conrad, Shalini Randeria, and Beate Sutterlüty (2002), Jenseits des Eurozentrismus: Postkoloniale Perspektiven in den Geschichts- und Kulturwissenschaften (Frankfurt am Main, New York: Campus); Sebastian Conrad, Andreas Eckert, and Ulrike Freitag (2007), Globalgeschichte: Theorien, Ansätze, Themen (Frankfurt am Main: Campus); interest. With certain shifts in emphasis, these approaches assume that the development of the modern world – including the difference between “religious” and “secular” – can no longer be merely understood as the result of a unidirectional diffusion of Western concepts throughout the rest of the world. This means that we knowingly consider transcultural interactions and transfers between Europe and Asia, and within Asia itself,¹⁰⁵ in order to overcome a “methodological nationalism”¹⁰⁶ – without excluding point-by-point comparisons. With a view to the emergence of the general term “religion” in 16th/17th century Europe – a prerequisite for explicitly conceptualising secularity – encounters between Jesuits and other Christian missionaries and other belief and ritual systems in mission territories were of particular significance.¹⁰⁷ In relation to establishing “religion” (zongjiao) as a generic term in China¹⁰⁸ – and similarly in Korea¹⁰⁹ – exchange processes with Japan were more significant than direct interaction with Europe. And the formulation of a modern academic understanding of religion is largely due to encounters between Western academics such as F. M. Müller and Sebastian Conrad (2013), Globalgeschichte: Eine Einführung (München: Beck); Hartmut Kaelble (2005), “Die Debatte über Vergleich und Transfer und was jetzt?” <http://www.hsozkult.de/article/id/artikel-574>, last accessed 6 April 2015; Hartmut Kaelble, and Jürgen Schriewer, eds. (2003), Vergleich und Transfer: Komparatistik in den Sozial-, Geschichts- und Kulturwissenschaften (Frankfurt am Main: Campus); Jürgen Osterhammel (2001), Geschichtswissenschaft jenseits des Nationalstaats: Studien zu Beziehungsgeschichte und Zivilisationsvergleich (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht) and (2011), Die Verwandlung der Welt; Michael Werner, and Bénédicte Zimmermann (2002), “Vergleich, Transfer, Verflechtung: Der Ansatz der Histoire croisée und die Herausforderung des Transnationalen,” Geschichte und Gesellschaft 28/4: 607–36.

105 Also see van der Veer (2001), Imperial encounters.

106 Werner, and Zimmermann (2002), “Vergleich, Transfer, Verflechtung”, 608.

107 Also see Heiner Roetz (2013), “The Influence of Foreign Knowledge on Eighteenth Century European Secularism,” in Religion and secularity: Transformations and transfers of religious discourses in Europe and Asia. Ed. Marion Eggert and Lucian Hölscher (Leiden: Brill), 9–34.

108 Robert F. Campany (2003), “On the Very Idea of Religions (In the Modern West and in Early Medieval China),” History of Religions 42/4: 287–319; Xiyuan Chen 陳 (1999), The Formation of Religious Discourse and the Confucian Movement in Modern China, Ph.D thesis, Harvard University; Chong-Sok Choe (1994), “Zong-jiao als Äquivalent des Religionsbegriffs im chinesischen Kulturkreis,” Mitteilungen für Anthropologie und Religionsgeschichte 9: 31–40; Christian Meyer (2009), “‘Religion’ and ‘Superstition’ in Introductory Works to Religious Studies in Early Republican China,” Bochumer Jahrbuch zur Ostasienforschung 33: 103–25 and (2013), “Der moderne chinesische ‘Religionsbegriff’ zongjiao als Beispiel translingualer Praxis: Rezeption westlicher Religionsbegriffe und -vorstellungen im China des frühen 20. Jahrhunderts,” in Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Ed. Peter Schalk et al. (Uppsala: Uppsala Universität), 351–92.

109 You J. Lee (2009), “The Concept of Religion and the Reception of Christianity in Korea Around 1900,” Bochumer Jahrbuch zur Ostasienforschung 33: 61–76.

Asian colleagues such as Nanjō Bun'yū, as well as intercultural events like the World Parliament of Religions in Chicago in 1893.¹¹⁰ By specifically seeking global exchange processes, which spawned modern concepts of secularity and have transformed it into an influential component of international politics, the HCAS is able to fill a gap in the existing research, and provides an answer to Kaelble's call for a "time of empirical research", which prevents the theoretical debates on entangled history and histoire croisée from becoming sterile.¹¹¹ The emphasis on entanglement should not trivialise the significance of the "issuing side", i.e. European powers with their expansive knowledge systems¹¹² and taxonomies, but should rather consider the corresponding dispositifs of action and perception, the selection mechanisms as well as the appropriation strategies of the recipients as historic subjects, and their contribution to the global debate on "secularity".

110 Dorothea Lüddeckens (2002), Das Weltparlament der Religionen von 1893: Strukturen interreligiöser Begegnung im 19. Jahrhundert (Berlin, New York: De Gruyter); Judith Snodgrass (2003), Presenting Japanese Buddhism to the West: Orientalism, Occidentalism, and the Columbian exposition (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press).

111 Kaelble (2005), "Die Debatte über Vergleich und Transfer und was jetzt?"; also see Bergunder (2011), "Was ist Religion?", 54.

112 E.g. Ingetraut Dahlberg (1974), Grundlagen universaler Wissensordnung: Probleme und Möglichkeiten eines universalen Klassifikationssystems des Wissens (Berlin: De Gruyter); Jakob Vogel (2004), "Von der Wissenschafts- zur Wissensgeschichte. Für eine Historisierung der 'Wissensgesellschaft,'" Geschichte und Gesellschaft 30/4: 639–60.

4 References

- Ammermann, Norbert (2000). Religiosität und Kontingenzbewältigung: Empirische und konstrukttheoretische Umsetzungen für Religionspädagogik und Seelsorge. Münster: LIT.
- Amstutz, Galen (2014). "How Was the Concept of 'Religion' Invented in Japan?" Journal of Religion in Japan 3/1: 47–60.
- Antoni, Klaus (1991). "Yasukuni und der 'Schlimme Tod' des Kriegers." In Der himmlische Herrscher und sein Staat: Essays zur Stellung des Tenno im modernen Japan. Edited by Klaus Antoni, 155–89. München: Iudicium.
- Appadurai, Arjun (2013). The future as cultural fact: Essays on the global condition. London: Verso Books.
- Arnal, William E., and Russell T. McCutcheon (2013). The Sacred is the Profane: The political nature of religion. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Asad, Talal (1997). Genealogies of religion: Discipline and reasons of power in Christianity and Islam. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- Asad, Talal (2003). Formations of the Secular: Christianity, Islam, Modernity. Edited by Mieke Bal, and Hent de Vries. Stanford: Stanford University Press.
- Asad, Talal (2006). "Responses." In Powers of the Secular Modern: Talal Asad and his Interlocutors. Edited by David Scott and Charles Hirschkind, 206–41. Stanford: Stanford University Press.
- Asad, Talal (2008). "Reflections on Blasphemy and Secular Criticism." In Religion: Beyond a Concept. Edited by Hent de Vries, 1–46. New York: Fordham University Press.
- Assmann, Jan (1992). Das kulturelle Gedächtnis: Schrift, Erinnerung und politische Identität in frühen Hochkulturen. München: Beck.
- Bader, Veit (2007). Secularism or democracy? Associational governance of religious diversity. Amsterdam: Amsterdam University Press.
- Bajpai, Rochana (2002). "The conceptual vocabularies of secularism and minority rights in India." Journal of Political Ideologies 7/2: 179–97.
- Barrett, Justin (2008). "Coding and Quantifying Counterintuitiveness in Religious Concepts: Theoretical and Methodological Reflections." Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 20/4: 308–38.
- Bauer, Thomas (2011). Die Kultur der Ambiguität: Eine andere Geschichte des Islams. Berlin: Verlag der Weltreligionen.
- Beard, Mary, John North, and Simon Price (1998). Religions of Rome. Volume 1. A History. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Bellah, Robert N. and Hans Joas, eds. (2012). The Axial Age and Its Consequences. Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press.
- Berger, Peter L., ed. (1999). The Desecularization of the World: Resurgent Religion and World Politics. Washington, DC: Ethics and Public Policy Center.
- Berger, Peter L. (1983). "Secularity: West and East." In Cultural Identity and Modernization in Asian Countries: Proceedings of Kokugakuin University Centennial Symposium. Edited by Kokugakuin University. <http://www2.kokugakuin.ac.jp/ijcc/wp/cimac/berger.html>, last accessed April 6, 2015.
- Berger, Peter L. (2013). Nach dem Niedergang der Säkularisierungstheorie. Münster: Centrum für Religion und Moderne.
- Berger, Peter L., and Thomas Luckmann (1966). „Secularization and Pluralism.“ Internationales Jahrbuch für Religionssoziologie 2: 73–86.
- Berger, Peter L., and Thomas Luckmann (1969). Die gesellschaftliche Konstruktion der Wirklichkeit: Eine Theorie der Wissenssoziologie. Frankfurt am Main: Fischer Taschenbuch Verlag.
- Bergunder, Michael (2011). "Was ist Religion? Kulturwissenschaftliche Überlegungen zum Gegenstand der Religionswissenschaft." Zeitschrift für Religionswissenschaft 19/1-2: 3–55.
- Béteille, André (1994). "Secularism and the Intellectuals." Economic and Political Weekly 29/10: 559–66.
- Beyer, Peter (2013). "Questioning the Secular/Religious Divide in a Post-Westphalian World." International Sociology 28/6: 663–79.

- Bhargava, Rajeev (1998). "What is secularism for?" In Secularism and its critics. Edited by Rajeev Bhargava, 486–542. New Delhi: Oxford University Press.
- Bhargava, Rajeev (2010). "The 'Secular Ideal' before Secularism: A Preliminary Sketch." In Comparative secularisms in a global age. Edited by Linell E. Cady, and Elizabeth S. Hurd, 159–80. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Bloom, Alfred (1999). "Rennyo: His Historical Significance and Contemporary Relevance." Pacific World (Third Series) 1: 3–22.
- Blum, Mark L. (2006). Rennyo and the roots of modern Japanese Buddhism. Oxford, New York: Oxford University Press.
- Bochinger, Christoph (2003). "Religionsvergleiche in religionswissenschaftlicher und theologischer Perspektive." In Vergleich und Transfer: Komparatistik in den Sozial-, Geschichts- und Kulturwissenschaften. Edited by Hartmut Kaelble, and Jürgen Schriewer, 251–81. Frankfurt am Main: Campus.
- Bochinger, Christoph, and Katharina Frank (2013). "Religion, Spiritualität und Säkularität in der Schweiz." In Handbuch Sozialwesen Schweiz. Edited by Anna M. Riedi, 201–13. Bern: Haupt.
- Bourdieu, Pierre (1997). "Zur Genese der Begriffe Habitus und Feld." In Der Tote packt den Lebenden: Pierre Bourdieu – Schriften zu Politik & Kultur. Edited by Margareta Steinrück, 59–78. Hamburg: VSA.
- Bourdieu, Pierre (2011). "Die Auflösung des Religiösen." In Religion. By Pierre Bourdieu, 243–49. Berlin: Suhrkamp.
- Boyer, Pascal (2001). Religion explained: The evolutionary origins of religious thought. New York: Basic Books.
- Bruce, Steve (1999). Choice and religion: A critique of rational choice theory. Oxford, New York: Oxford University Press.
- Burchardt, Marian, and Monika Wohlrab-Sahr (2013). "Von Multiple Modernities zu Multiple Secularities: kulturelle Diversität, Säkularismus und Toleranz als Leitidee in Indien." Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie 38/4: 355–74.
- Burchardt, Marian and Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, eds. (2013). "Multiple Secularities: Religion and Modernity in the Global Age." Special issue, International Sociology 28/6.
- Burchardt, Marian, Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Matthias Middell, eds. (2015). Multiple Secularities Beyond the West: Religion and Modernity in the Global Age. Boston: De Gruyter.
- Burchardt, Marian, Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Ute Wegert (2013). "'Multiple Secularities': Post-colonial variations and guiding ideas in India and South Africa." International Sociology 28/6: 612–28.
- Cady, Linell E. and Elizabeth S. Hurd, eds. (2010). Comparative secularisms in a global age. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Campany, Robert F. (2003). "On the Very Idea of Religions (In the Modern West and in Early Medieval China)." History of Religions 42/4: 287–319. doi:10.1086/378757.
- Casanova, José (1994). Public Religions in the Modern World. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Casanova, José (2006). "Secularization Revisited: A Reply to Talal Asad." In Powers of the Secular Modern: Talal Asad and his Interlocutors. Edited by David Scott, and Charles Hirschkind, 12–30. Stanford: Stanford University Press.
- Casanova, José (2008). "Public religions revisited." In Religion: Beyond a Concept. Edited by Hent de Vries, 101–19. New York: Fordham University Press.
- Casanova, José (2009). Europas Angst vor der Religion. Berlin: Berlin University Press.
- Casanova, José (2011). "The secular, secularizations, secularisms." In Rethinking secularism. Edited by Craig Calhoun, Mark Juergensmeyer, and Jonathan VanAntwerpen, 54–74. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Casanova, José (2012). "Religion, the Axial Age, and Secular Modernity in Bellah's Theory of Religious Evolution." In The Axial Age and Its Consequences. Edited by Robert N. Bellah, and Hans Joas, 191–221. Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press.
- Castro Varela, María do Mar, and Nikita Dhanwan (2005). Postkoloniale Theorie: Eine kritische Einführung. Bielefeld: Transcript.
- Chaves, Mark (1994). "Secularization as Declining Religious Authority." Social Forces 72/3: 749–74.
- Chen, Xiyuan 陳 (1999) The Formation of Religious Discourse and the Confucian Move-

- ment in Modern China. Ph.D thesis, Harvard University.
- Ch'en, Kenneth K. S. (1952). "Anti-Buddhist Propaganda During The Nan-ch'ao." Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies 15/1-2: 166-92.
- Ch'en, Kenneth K. S. (1972). Buddhism in China: A historical survey. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Choe, Chong-Sok (1994). "Zong-jiao als Äquivalent des Religionsbegriffs im chinesischen Kulturkreis." Mitteilungen für Anthropologie und Religionsgeschichte 9: 31-40.
- Conrad, Sebastian (2013). Globalgeschichte: Eine Einführung. München: Beck.
- Conrad, Sebastian, Andreas Eckert, and Ulrike Freitag (2007). Globalgeschichte: Theorien, Ansätze, Themen. Frankfurt am Main: Campus.
- Conrad, Sebastian, Shalini Randeria, and Beate Sutterlüty (2002). Jenseits des Eurozentrismus: Postkoloniale Perspektiven in den Geschichts- und Kulturwissenschaften. Frankfurt am Main, New York: Campus.
- Conze, Werner, Hans W. Strätz, and Hermann Zabel (1984). "Säkularisation, Säkularisierung." In Geschichtliche Grundbegriffe: Historisches Lexikon zur politisch-sozialen Sprache in Deutschland. Vol. 5. Edited by Otto Brunner, Werner Conze, and Reinhart Koselleck, 789-829. Stuttgart: Klett.
- Cox, Harvey G., and Jan Swyngedouw (2000). "The Myth of the Twentieth Century: The Rise and Fall of Secularization." Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 27/1-2: 1-13.
- Dahlberg, Ingetraut (1974). Grundlagen universaler Wissensordnung: Probleme und Möglichkeiten eines universalen Klassifikationssystems des Wissens. Berlin: De Gruyter.
- Das, Veena (1995). Critical events: An anthropological perspective on contemporary India. Delhi, New York: Oxford University Press.
- De Souza, P. R. (2012) "Through the Lense of a Constitutional Republic. The Case of the Controversial Textbook" Economic & Political Weekly 47/22: 14-17.
- Demerath, N. J. (2007) "Secularization and Sacralization Deconstructed and Reconstructed." In The SAGE Handbook of the Sociology of Religion. Edited by James A. Beckford and N. J. Demerath, 57-80. Los Angeles: Sage.
- Derret, John D. M. (1976). "Rajadharma." The Journal of Asian Studies 35/4: 597-609.
- Diner, Dan (2005). Versiegelte Zeit: Über den Stillstand in der islamischen Welt. Berlin: Propyläen.
- Dobbins, James C. (2002). Jōdo Shinshū: Shin Buddhism in medieval Japan. Honolulu: University of Hawai'i Press.
- Durkheim, Emile (1912). Les formes élémentaires de la vie religieuse. Le système totémique en Australie. Paris: Alcan.
- Edgell, Penny, Joseph Gerteis, and Douglas Hartmann (2006). "Atheists As 'Other': Moral Boundaries and Cultural Membership in American Society." American Sociological Review 71: 211-34.
- Eger, Max (1980). "'Modernization' and 'Secularization' in Japan A Polemical Essay." Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 7/1: 7-24.
- Eggert, Marion, and Lucian Hölscher, eds. (2013). Religion and secularity: Transformations and transfers of religious discourses in Europe and Asia. Leiden: Brill.
- Eisenstadt, Shmuel N. (1980). The axial age, rise of transcendental visions, the emergence of intellectuals and of clerics, and the structuring of world history. Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem.
- Eisenstadt, Shmuel N. (1986). The Origins and diversity of axial age civilizations. Albany: SUNY Press.
- Eisenstadt, Shmuel N. (1987). Kulturen der Achsenzeit: Ihre Ursprünge und ihre Vielfalt. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Eisenstadt, Shmuel N. (2000). "Multiple Modernities." Daedalus 129/1: 1-29.
- Eisenstadt, Shmuel N. (2005). "Axial civilizations and the Axial Age Reconsidered." In Axial Civilizations and World History. Edited by Jóhann P. Árnason, Shmuel N. Eisenstadt, and Björn Wittrock, 531-64. Leiden: Brill.
- Esposito, John L. (2000). "Islam and Secularism in the Twenty-First Century." In Islam and Secularism in the Middle East. Edited by John L. Esposito and Azzam Tamimi, 1-12. London: Hurst & Company.
- Eßbach, Wolfgang (2014). Religionssoziologie 1: Glaubenskrieg und Revolution als Wiege neuer Religionen. Paderborn: Fink.

- Fischer, Peter (2001). "Versuche einer Wiederbelebung von Staatsreligion im heutigen Japan unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Entwicklungsgeschichte des Staats-Shintō." In Zwischen Säkularismus und Hierokratie: Studien zum Verhältnis von Religion und Staat in Süd- und Ostasien. Edited by Peter Schalk, 209–47. Uppsala: Uppsala Universitet.
- Fitzgerald, Timothy (1997). "A critique of 'religion' as a cross-cultural category." Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 9/2: 91–110.
- Fitzgerald, Timothy (2000). The Ideology of Religious Studies. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Fitzgerald, Timothy (2003). „Religion and the Secular in Japan: Problems in history, social anthropology and the study of religion.“ electronic journal of contemporary japanese studies. <http://www.japanesestudies.org.uk/discussionpapers/Fitzgerald.html>, last accessed 8 April 2015.
- Fitzgerald, Timothy (2010). Religion and the Secular: Historical and Colonial Formations. London: Equinox.
- Flasche, Rainer (2008). Religionswissenschaft-Treiben: Versuch einer Grundlegung der Religionenwissenschaft. Berlin: LIT.
- Foucault, Michel, and Ralf Konersmann (2007). Die Ordnung des Diskurses. Frankfurt am Main: Fischer Taschenbuch Verlag.
- Freiberger, Oliver (2011). "Der Vergleich als Methode und konstitutiver Ansatz der Religionswissenschaft." In Religionen erforschen: Kulturwissenschaftliche Methoden in der Religionswissenschaft. Edited by Stefan Kurth, and Karsten Lehmann, 199–218. Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften.
- Giddens, Anthony (1991). The consequences of modernity. Cambridge: Blackwell.
- Göle, Nilüfer (1997). The Forbidden Modern: Civilization and Veiling. Critical perspectives on women and gender. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press.
- Goossaert, Vincent, and David A. Palmer (2011). The religious question in modern China. Chicago, London: University of Chicago Press.
- Gorski, Philip S. (2000). "Historicizing the secularization debate: Church, state and society in late medieval and early modern Europe, ca. 1300-1700." American Sociological Review 65: 138–67.
- Graf, Friedrich W. (2004). Die Wiederkehr der Götter: Religion in der modernen Kultur. München: Beck.
- Gruber, Franz (2012). "Glaube als Kontingenzbewältigung." Theologisch-praktische Quartalschrift 160: 381–91.
- Gusfield, Joseph R. (1967) "Tradition and Modernity: Misplaced Polarities in the Study of Social Change." American Journal of Sociology 72/4: 351–62.
- Habermas, Jürgen (2013). "Religion in der Öffentlichkeit." In Zwischen Naturalismus und Religion: Philosophische Aufsätze. By Jürgen Habermas, 119–54. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Hadden, John (1987). "Towards desacralizing secularization theory." Social Forces 65/3: 587–611.
- Hahn, Alois (1987). "Kanonisierungsstile." In Kanon und Zensur: Beiträge zur Archäologie der literarischen Kommunikation. Edited by Aleida Assmann, and Jan Assmann, 28–37. München: Fink.
- Henrich, Joseph (2001). "Cultural Transmission and the Diffusion of Innovations: Adoption Dynamics Indicate That Biased Cultural Transmission Is the Predominate Force in Behavioral Change." American Anthropologist 1003/4: 992–1013.
- Herbers, Klaus, ed. (2014). Unterwegs im Namen der Religion/On the Road in the Name of Religion: Pilgern als Form von Kontingenzbewältigung und Zukunftssicherung in den Weltreligionen / Pilgrimage as a Means of Coping with Contingency and Fixing the Future in the World's Major Religions. Stuttgart: Steiner.
- Hock, Klaus (2006). Einführung in die Religionswissenschaft. Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft.
- Hoeber Rudolph, Susanne, and Lloyd I. Hoebler (2001). "Living with difference in India: Legal pluralism and legal universalism in historical context." In Religion and personal law in secular India: A call to judgment. Edited by Gerald J. Larson, 36–65. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Hori Ichirō 堀一郎 (1975). Sei to zoku no kattō 聖と俗の葛藤. Tokio: Heibonsha.

- Horii, Mitsutoshi (2016). „Critical Reflections on the Religious-Secular Dichotomy in Japan.“ In Making religion. Theory and practice in the discursive study of religion. Edited by Frans Wijzen, and Kocku von Stuckrad, 260–86. Leiden: Brill.
- Hunter, Ian (2015). “Secularization: The Birth of a Modern Combat Concept.” Modern Intellectual History 12/1: 1–32.
- Huss, Boaz (2014). “The Sacred is the Profane, Spirituality is not Religion: The Decline of the Religion/Secular Divide and the Emergence of the Critical Discourse on Religion.” Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 2014: 1–7.
- Ikado, Fujio (1983). „The Search for a Definition of Secularization.“ In Cultural Identity and Modernization in Asian Countries: Proceedings of Kokugakuin University Centennial Symposium. Edited by Kokugakuin University. <http://www2.kokugakuin.ac.jp/ijcc/wp/cimac/ikado.html>, last accessed 6 January 2011.
- Inglehart, Ronald, and Wayne E. Baker (2000). “Modernization, Cultural Change, and the Persistence of Traditional Values.” American Sociological Review 65/1: 19–51.
- Isomae, Jun’ichi 磯 (2002). “Kindai ni okeru ‘shūkyō’ gainen no keisei katei 近代における「宗教」概念の形成過程.” In Kindaichi no seiritsu 近代知の成立. Edited by Komori Yōichi 小森陽一, 161–96. Tokyo: Iwanami Shoten.
- Jakobsen, Janet R., and Ann Pellegrini (2008). Secularisms. Durham: Duke University Press.
- Josephson, Jason Ā. (2006). “When Buddhism Became a ‘Religion’: Religion and Superstition in the Writings of Inoue Enryō.” Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 33/1: 143–68.
- Josephson, Jason Ā. (2012). The Invention of Religion in Japan. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Kaelble, Hartmut (2005). “Die Debatte über Vergleich und Transfer und was jetzt?” <http://www.hsozkult.de/article/id/artikel-574>, last accessed 6 April 2015.
- Kaelble, Hartmut and Jürgen Schriewer, eds. (2003). Vergleich und Transfer: Komparatistik in den Sozial-, Geschichts- und Kulturwissenschaften. Frankfurt am Main: Campus.
- Kinitz, Daniel (2015). “Deviance as Phenomenon of Secularity: Islam and Deviants in Twentieth-century Egypt—A Search for Sociological Explanations.” in Multiple Secularities Beyond the West: Religion and Modernity in the Global Age. Edited by Marian Burchardt, Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Matthias Middell, 97–119. Boston: De Gruyter.
- Kinitz, Daniel (2016). Die andere Seite des Islam: Säkularismus-Diskurs und muslimische Intellektuelle im modernen Ägypten. Berlin: De Gruyter.
- Kippenberg, Hans G., and Kocku von Stuckrad (2003). Einführung in die Religionswissenschaft: Gegenstände und Begriffe. München: Beck.
- Kleine, Christoph (2009). “Pluralismus und Pluralität in der japanischen Religionsgeschichte: Am Beispiel nonkonformer buddhistischer Bewegungen des 13. Jahrhunderts.” In Mauss, Buddhismus, Devianz: Festschrift für Heinz Mürmel zum 65. Geburtstag. Edited by Thomas Hase et al., 189–216. Marburg: Diagonal Verlag.
- Kleine, Christoph (2010). “Wozu außereuropäische Religionsgeschichte? Überlegungen zu ihrem Nutzen für die religionswissenschaftliche Theorie- und Identitätsbildung.” Zeitschrift für Religionswissenschaft 18/1: 2–38.
- Kleine, Christoph (2012). “Zur Universalität der Unterscheidung religiös/säkular: Eine systemtheoretische Betrachtung.” In Religionswissenschaft: Ein Studienbuch. Edited by Michael Stausberg, 65–80. Berlin: De Gruyter.
- Kleine, Christoph (2012). “Autonomie und Interdependenz: Zu den politischen Voraussetzungen für staatliche Säkularität und religiöse Pluralität im vormodernen Japan.” Religion – Staat – Gesellschaft 13/1: 13–34.
- Kleine, Christoph (2013). “Religion and the Secular in Premodern Japan from the Viewpoint of Systems Theory.” Journal of Religion in Japan 2/1: 1–34. doi:10.1163/22118349-12341246.
- Kleine, Christoph (2013). “Säkulare Identitäten im ‘Zaubergarten’ des vormodernen Japan? Theoretische Überlegungen auf historischer Basis.” In Säkularität in religionswissen-

- schafflicher Perspektive*. Edited by Peter Antes and Steffen Fühding, 109–30. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.
- Kleine, Christoph (2013). "Religion als begriffliches Konzept und soziales System im vormodernen Japan: Polythetische Klassen, semantische und funktionale Äquivalente und strukturelle Analogien." In Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Edited by Peter Schalk et al., 225–92. Uppsala: Uppsala Universität.
- Knöbl, Wolfgang (2007). Die Kontingenz der Moderne: Wege in Europa, Asien und Amerika. Frankfurt am Main, New York: Campus.
- Knoblauch, Hubert (1991). "Die Verflüchtigung der Religion ins Religiöse." In Die unsichtbare Religion. By Thomas Luckmann, 7–41. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Knoblauch, Hubert (2009). Populäre Religion: Auf dem Weg in eine spirituelle Gesellschaft. Frankfurt am Main, New York: Campus.
- Koenig, Matthias (2007). "Europäisierung von Religionspolitik: Zur institutionellen Umwelt der Anerkennungskämpfe muslimischer Migranten." In "Konfliktfeld Islam in Europa." Edited by Monika Wohlrab-Sahr and Levent Tezcan. Special issue, Soziale Welt 17: 347–68.
- Krämer, Gudrun (2015). "Secularity Contested: Religion, Identity, and Public Order in the Arab Middle East." In Multiple Secularities Beyond the West: Religion and Modernity in the Global Age. Edited by Marian Burchardt, Monika Wohlrab-Sahr, and Matthias Midell, 121–37. Boston: De Gruyter.
- Krämer, Hans M. (2012). "Zwischen westlichem Wissen und eigener Tradition: Zur Aneignung und Übersetzung von Religion in Japan, 16. bis 20. Jahrhundert." Habilitationsschrift, Fakultät für Ostasienwissenschaften, Ruhr-Universität Bochum.
- Krämer, Hans M. (2013). "An der Schwelle zum modernen Religionsbegriff: Der Beitrag japanischer Buddhisten, 1850-1880." In Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Edited by Peter Schalk et al., 320–49. Uppsala: Uppsala Universität.
- Kuo, Cheng-tian (2008). Religion and democracy in Taiwan. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Kuru, Ahmet T. (2009). Secularism and State Policies toward Religion: The United States, France, and Turkey. Cambridge, New York: Cambridge University Press.
- Laliberté, André (2004). The politics of Buddhist organizations in Taiwan, 1989–2000. New York, London: RoutledgeCurzon.
- Landmesser, Franz X. (1926). Die Eigengesetzlichkeit der Kultursachgebiete (Wirtschaft und Staat): Ein Beitrag zum Problem 'Religion und Kultur'. Köln: Oratoriums-Verlag.
- Lapidus, Ira M. (1975). "The Separation of State and Religion in the Development of Early Islamic Society." International Journal of Middle East Studies 6/4: 363–85.
- Lapidus, Ira M. (1992). "The Golden Age: The Political Concepts of Islam." Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 524: 13–25.
- Lapidus, Ira M. (1996). "State and Religion in Islamic Societies." Past & Present 151: 3–27.
- Lee, You J. (2009). "The Concept of Religion and the Reception of Christianity in Korea Around 1900." Bochumer Jahrbuch zur Ostasienforschung 33: 61–76.
- Lübbe, Hermann (1975). Säkularisierung: Geschichte eines ideenpolitischen Begriffs. Freiburg, München: Verlag Karl Alber.
- Lubin, Tomthy (2007). "Punishment and Expiation: Overlapping Domains in Brahmanical Law." Indologica Taurinensia 33: 93–122.
- Luckmann, Thomas (1980). Lebenswelt und Gesellschaft: Grundstrukturen und geschichtliche Wandlungen. Paderborn: Ferdinand Schöningh.
- Luckmann, Thomas (1991). Die unsichtbare Religion. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Lüddeckens, Dorothea (2002). Das Weltparlament der Religionen von 1893: Strukturen interreligiöser Begegnung im 19. Jahrhundert. Berlin, New York: De Gruyter.
- Luhmann, Niklas (1977). Funktion der Religion. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Luhmann, Niklas (1991). Soziale Systeme: Grundriß einer allgemeinen Theorie. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Luhmann, Niklas (1993). Gesellschaftsstruktur und Semantik: Studien zur Wissenssoziologie der modernen Gesellschaft Band 1. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Luhmann, Niklas (1995). "Die gesellschaftliche Differenzierung und das Individuum." In Soziologische Aufklärung 6: Die Soziologie und der Mensch. By Niklas Luhmann, 125–

41. Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag.
- Luhmann, Niklas (2000). Die Religion der Gesellschaft. Edited by André Kieserling. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Luhmann, Niklas (2013). A systems theory of religion. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Madan, T. N. (1998). "Secularism in its place." In Secularism and its critics. Edited by Rajeev Bhargava, 297–320. New Delhi: Oxford University Press.
- Madsen, Richard (2007). Democracy's dharma: Religious renaissance and political development in Taiwan. Berkeley, CA: University of California Press.
- Mahmood, Saba (2006). "Secularism, Hermeneutics, and Empire: The Politics of Islamic Reformation." Public Culture 18/2: 323–47.
- Martin, David (1978). A General Theory of Secularization. Oxford: Blackwell.
- Martin, David (2006). "Comparative Secularisation North and South." In Religiosität in der säkularisierten Welt: Theoretische und empirische Beiträge zur Säkularisierungsdebatte in der Religionssoziologie. Edited by Manuel Franzmann, Christel Gärtner, and Nicole Köck, 105–22. Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften.
- Martin, David (2014). Religion and Power: No Logos without Mythos. Burlington: Ashgate.
- Masuzawa, Tomoko (2000). "The Production of 'Religion' and the Task of the Scholar: Russell McCutcheon among the Smiths." Culture and Religion 1/1: 123–30.
- Masuzawa, Tomoko (2005). The invention of world religions, or, How European universalism was preserved in the language of pluralism. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- McCutcheon, Russell T. (1997) Manufacturing Religion: The Discourse on Sui Generis Religion and the Politics of Nostalgia. New York: Oxford University Press.
- McCutcheon, Russell T. (2007). "They Licked the Platter Clean: On the Co-Dependency of the Religious and The Secular." Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 19/3-4: 173–99.
- McFarland, Horace N. (1967). The Rush Hour of the Gods: A Study of New Religious Movements in Japan. New York: MacMillan.
- McLeod, Hugh, ed. (1995). European Religion in the Age of Great Cities 1830-1930. London, New York: Routledge.
- Meyer, Christian (2009). "'Religion' and 'Superstition' in Introductory Works to Religious Studies in Early Republican China." Bochumer Jahrbuch zur Ostasienforschung 33: 103–25.
- Meyer, Christian (2013). "Der moderne chinesische 'Religionsbegriff' zongjiao als Beispiel translingualer Praxis: Rezeption westlicher Religionsbegriffe und -vorstellungen im China des frühen 20. Jahrhunderts." In Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Edited by Peter Schalk et al., 351–92. Uppsala: Uppsala Universitet.
- Modood, Tariq (2010). "Moderate Secularism, Religion as Identity and Respect for Religion." The Political Quarterly 81/1: 4–14.
- Mommsen, Wolfgang J., and Wolfgang Schwenker (1999). Max Weber und das moderne Japan. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.
- Münch, Richard (2011). "Strukturen: Die Ausdifferenzierung und Institutionalisierung von Handlungsräumen." In Handbuch der Kulturwissenschaften. 1: Grundlagen und Schlüsselbegriffe. Edited by Friedrich Jaeger et al., 173–89. Stuttgart, Weimar: Metzler.
- Nandy, Ashis (1990). "The politics of secularism and the recovery of religious tolerance." In Mirrors of violence: Communities, riots, and survivors in South Asia. Edited by Vee-na Das, 321–44. Delhi, New York: Oxford University Press.
- Nandy, Ashis (1995). „An Anti-Secularist Manifesto.“ India International Centre Quarterly 22: 35–64.
- Nandy, Ashis (1998). "The Politics of Secularism and the Recovery of Religious Tolerance." In Secularism and its critics. Edited by Rajeev Bhargava, 321–79. New Delhi: Oxford University Press.
- Nedostup, Rebecca (2009). Superstitious regimes: Religion and the politics of Chinese modernity. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Nelson, John (2012). "Japanese Secularities and the Decline of Temple Buddhism." Journal of Religion in Japan 1/1: 37–60.
- Nongbri, Brent (2008). "Dislodging 'Embedded' Religion: A Brief Note on a Scholarly Trope." Numen 55/4: 440–60.
- Ollig, Hans-Ludwig (1988). "Kontingenz-

- bewältigung angesichts der Sinnfrage. Überlegungen zum gesellschaftlichen Ort von Religion." In Tradition und Innovation: XIII. Deutscher Kongress für Philosophie, Bonn, 24.-29. September 1984. Edited by Wolfgang Kluxen, and Tilman Borsche, 513–21. Hamburg: Meiner.
- Osterhammel, Jürgen (2001). Geschichtswissenschaft jenseits des Nationalstaats: Studien zu Beziehungsgeschichte und Zivilisationsvergleich. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.
- Osterhammel, Jürgen (2011). Die Verwandlung der Welt: Eine Geschichte des 19. Jahrhunderts. München: Beck.
- Pollack, Detlef (2003). Säkularisierung – ein moderner Mythos? Studien zum religiösen Wandel in Deutschland. Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck.
- Pollack, Detlef (2006). "Explaining Religious Vitality: Theoretical considerations and empirical findings in Western and Eastern Europe." In Religiosität in der säkularisierten Welt: Theoretische und empirische Beiträge zur Säkularisierungsdebatte in der Religionssoziologie. Edited by Manuel Franzmann, Christel Gärtner, and Nicole Köck, 83–103. Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften.
- Pye, Michael (2003). "Religion and Conflict in Japan with Special Reference to Shinto and Yasukuni Shrine." Diogenes 50/3: 45–59.
- Reader, Ian (2004). "Ideology, Academic Inventions and Mystical Anthropology: Responding to Fitzgerald's Errors and Misguided Polemics." electronic journal of contemporary japanese studies. <http://www.japanesestudies.org.uk/discussionpapers/Reader.html>, last accessed 8 April 2015.
- Reader, Ian (2012). "Secularisation RIP? Nonsense! The 'rush hour away from the gods' and the decline of religion in contemporary Japan." The Journal of Religion in Japan 1/1: 1–39.
- Robertson, Roland (1990). "Mapping the Global Condition. Globalization as the Central Concept." In Global culture: Nationalism, globalization, and modernity A Theory, Culture & Society Special Issue. Edited by Mike Featherstone, 15–30. London, Newbury Park: Sage Publications.
- Rocher, Ludo, and Donald R. Davis (2012). Studies in Hindu law and Dharmaśāstra. London, New York: Anthem Press.
- Roesler, Ulrike (2013). „Die Lehre, der Weg und die namenlose Religion: Mögliche Äquivalente eines Religionsbegriffs in der tibetischen Kultur.“ In Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Edited by Peter Schalk et al., 129–150. Uppsala: Uppsala Universitet.
- Roetz, Heiner (2013). "The Influence of Foreign Knowledge on Eighteenth Century European Secularism." In Religion and secularity: Transformations and transfers of religious discourses in Europe and Asia. Edited by Marion Eggert, and Lucian Hölscher, 9–34. Leiden: Brill.
- Rogers, Everett M. (1962). Diffusion of innovations. New York: Free Press of Glencoe.
- Rogers, Minor and Ann Rogers, eds. (1991). Renmyo: The second founder of Shin Buddhism with a translation of his Letters. Berkeley, CA: Asian Humanities Press.
- Roy, Olivier (2006). Der islamische Weg nach Westen: Globalisierung, Entwurzelung und Radikalisierung. München: Pantheon.
- Roy, Olivier (2011). Heilige Einfalt: Über die politischen Gefahren entwurzelter Religionen. München: Randomhouse.
- Ruegg, David S. (1995). Ordre spirituel et ordre temporel dans la pensée bouddhique de l'Inde et du Tibet: Quatre conférences au collège de France. Paris: Collège de France, Institut de civilisation indienne; Diffusion De Boccard.
- Ruegg, David Seyfort (2001). "A Note on the Relationship between Buddhist and 'Hindu' Divinities in Buddhist Literature and Iconology: The laukika/lokottara Contrast and the Notion of an Indian 'Religious Substratum'" In Le parole e i marmi. Studi in onore di Raniero Gnoli nel suo 70. Edited by Raniero Gnoli, Raffaele Torella, and Claudio Cicuzza, 735–742. Rom: Istituto italiano per l'Africa e l'Oriente; Herder International Book Centre.
- Rüpke, Jörg (2001). Die Religion der Römer: Eine Einführung. München: Beck.
- Schalk, Peter, Max Deeg, Oliver Freiburger, Christoph Kleine, and Astrid van Nahl, eds. (2013). Religion in Asien? Studien zur Anwendbarkeit des Religionsbegriffs. Uppsala: Uppsala Universitet.

- Schilbrack, Kevin (2011). "Religions: Are There Any?" Journal of the American Academy of Religion 78: 1112–38.
- Schilbrack, Kevin (2012). "The Social Construction of 'Religion' and Its Limits: A Critical Reading of Timothy Fitzgerald." Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 24: 97–117.
- Schluchter, Wolfgang (1988). Religion und Lebensführung: Band 1: Studien zu Max Webers Kultur- und Werttheorie. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Schuh, Cora, Marian Burchardt, and Monika Wohlrab-Sahr (2012). "Contested Secularities: Religious Minorities and Secular Progressivism in the Netherlands." Journal of Religion in Europe 5: 349–83.
- Schüler, Sebastian (2011). Religion, Kognition, Evolution: Eine religionswissenschaftliche Auseinandersetzung mit der Cognitive Science of Religion. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer.
- Schulze, Reinhard (1994). Geschichte der islamischen Welt im 20. Jahrhundert. München: Beck.
- Schütz, Alfred (1945). "On Multiple Realities." Philosophy and Phenomenological Research 5/4: 533–76.
- Schwentker, Wolfgang (1998). Max Weber in Japan: Eine Untersuchung zur Wirkungsgeschichte 1905-1995. Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck.
- Schwinn, Thomas (1998). "Wertsphären, Lebensordnungen und Lebensführungen." In Verantwortliches Handeln in gesellschaftlichen Ordnungen: Beiträge zu Wolfgang Schluchters Religion und Lebensführung. Edited by Agathe Bienfait, and Gerhard Wagner, 270–319. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp.
- Schwinn, Thomas (2009). "Multiple Modernities: Konkurrierende Thesen und offene Fragen. Ein Literaturbericht in konstruktiver Absicht." Zeitschrift für Soziologie 38: 454–76.
- Scott, David, and Charles Hirschkind (2006). "Introduction: The Anthropological Skepticism of Talal Asad." In Powers of the Secular Modern: Talal Asad and his Interlocutors. Edited by David Scott and Charles Hirschkind, 1–11. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Scott, David and Charles Hirschkind, eds. (2006). Powers of the Secular Modern: Talal Asad and his Interlocutors. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Seiwert, Hubert (1987). "Religion und kulturelle Integration in China: Die Sinisierung Fujians und die Integration in die chinesische Nationalkultur." Saeculum 38: 225–65.
- Seiwert, Hubert (1995). "Religion in der Geschichte der Moderne." Zeitschrift für Religionswissenschaft 3/1: 91–101.
- Seiwert, Hubert (2013). "Die Säkularität des konfuzianischen Staates und das Böckenförde-Dilemma." In Anvertraute Worte: Festschrift Helwig Schmidt-Glintzer zum 65. Geburtstag. Edited by Susanne Rode-Breyman, and Achim Mittag, 193–207. Hannover: Wehrhahn.
- Sheehan, Jonathan (2003). "Enlightenment, Religion, and the Enigma of Secularization: A Review Essay." American Historical Review 108/4: 1061–80.
- Sheehan, Jonathan (2006). "Sacred and Profane: Idolatry, Antiquarianism and the Polemics of Distinction in the Seventeenth Century." Past & Present 192/1: 35–66. doi:10.1093/pastj/gtl005.
- Shimazono Susumu 島蘭進 and Tsuruoka Yōshio 鶴岡賀, eds. (2004). "Shūkyō saikō 宗教 再考: Shohan. Tokio: Perikansha.
- Smith, Christian (2003). "Introduction: Rethinking the secularization of American public life." In The Secular Revolution: Power, interests, and conflict in the secularization of American public life. Edited by Christian Smith, 1–95. Berkeley, CA: University of California Press.
- Smith, Wilfred C. (1963). The Meaning and End of Religion: A New Approach to the Religious Traditions of Mankind. New York: MacMillan.
- Snodgrass, Judith (2003). Presenting Japanese Buddhism to the West: Orientalism, Occidentalism, and the Columbian exposition. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Solomon, Michael (1997). Rennyō and the rise of Hōganji: Shin Buddhism and Society in Medieval Japan. Los Angeles: Pure Land Publications.
- Stark, Rodney (1999). "Secularization, R.I.P." Sociology of Religion 60/3: 249–73.
- Stark, Rodney, and William S. Bainbridge

- (1987). A theory of religion. New York: Peter Lang.
- Stark, Rodney, and Roger Finke (2000). Acts of Faith: Explaining the Human Side of Religion. Berkeley, CA: University of California Press.
- Stark, Rodney, and Laurence R. Iannaccone (1994). "A Supply-Side Reinterpretation of the 'Secularization' of Europe." Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 33/3: 230–52.
- Stausberg, Michael (2010). „Distinctions, Differentiations, Ontology, and Non-humans in Theories of Religion.“ Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 22: 354–374.
- Stepan, Alfred (2000). "Religion, Democracy, and the "Twin Tolerations"" Journal of Democracy 11/4: 37–57.
- Stroumsa, Guy G. (2010). A new science: The discovery of religion in the Age of Reason. Cambridge: Harvard University Press.
- Stuckrad, Kocku von (2010). "Reflections on the Limits of Reflection: An Invitation to the Discursive Study of Religion." Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 22/2: 156–69.
- Stuckrad, Kocku von (2013). "Discursive Study of Religion: Approaches, Definitions, Implications." Method & Theory in the Study of Religion 25/1: 5–25. doi:10.1163/15700682-12341253.
- Swyngedouw, Jan (1979). "Reflections on the Secularization Thesis in the Sociology of Religion in Japan." Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 6/1-2: 65–88.
- Takayama, K. P. (1988). "Revitalization Movement of Modern Japanese Civil Religion." Sociological Analysis 48/4: 328–41.
- Takayama, K. P. (1993). "The Revitalization of Japanese Civil Religion." In Religion and society in modern Japan: Selected readings. Edited by Mark R. Mullins, Shimazono Susumu 島蘭進, and Paul L. Swanson, 105–20. Berkeley, CA: Asian Humanities Press.
- Tamaru, Noriyoshi (1979). "The Problem of Secularization: A Preliminary Analysis." Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 6/1-2: 89–114.
- Taylor, Charles (2007). A Secular Age. Cambridge: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press.
- Tejani, Shabnum (2008). Indian secularism: A social and intellectual history, 1890–1950. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Thapar, Romila (2007). "Is Secularism Alien To Indian Civilization?" In The Future of Secularism. Edited by T. N. Srinivasan, 83–108. New Delhi, New York: Oxford University Press.
- Tyrell, Hartmann (2008). "Religiöse Kommunikation: Auge, Ohr und Medienvielfalt." In Soziale und gesellschaftliche Differenzierung: Aufsätze zur soziologischen Theorie. Edited by Bettina Heintz et al., 251–314. Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften.
- van der Veer, Peter (1995). "The Secular Production of Religion." Etnofoor 8/2: 5–14.
- van der Veer, Peter (1998). "The Global History of "Modernity"" Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 41/3: 285–94.
- van der Veer, Peter (2001). Imperial encounters: Religion and modernity in India and Britain. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- van der Veer, Peter (2012). "Religion, Secularism and National Development in India and China." Third World Quarterly 33/4: 721–34.
- Vogel, Jakob (2004). "Von der Wissenschaftszur Wissensgeschichte. Für eine Historisierung der "Wissensgesellschaft"" Geschichte und Gesellschaft 30/4: 639–60.
- Wallis, Roy, and Steve Bruce (1992). "Secularization: The Orthodox Model." In Religion and Modernization: Sociologists and Historians Debate the Secularization Thesis. Edited by Steve Bruce, 8–30. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Wang, Gungwu (2001). The Future of Secular Values. <http://essays.ssrc.org/10yearsafter911/the-future-of-secular-values/>, last accessed 26 April 2015.
- Wang, Gungwu (2003). "Secular China." China Report 39/3 (2003): 305–21.
- Warner, Stephen (1993). "Work in Progress toward a New Paradigm for the Sociological Study in Religion in the United States." American Journal of Sociology 98/5: 1044–93.
- Weber, Max (1980). Wirtschaft und Gesellschaft: Grundriss der verstehenden Soziologie. Edited by Johannes Winckelmann. Tübingen: Mohr.

- Weber, Max (1985). "Die 'Objektivität' sozialwissenschaftlicher und sozialpolitischer Erkenntnis." In Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Wissenschaftslehre. Edited by Johannes Winkelmann, 146–214. Tübingen: Mohr.
- Weber, Max (1988). „Die asiatische Sekten- und Heilandsreligiosität.“ In Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Religionssoziologie 2. Edited by Marianne Weber, 251–378, Tübingen: Mohr.
- Weber, Max (1988). "Zwischenbetrachtung: Theorie der Stufen und Richtungen religiöser Weltablehnung." In Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Religionssoziologie 1. Edited by Marianne Weber, 536–72. Tübingen: Mohr.
- Wejnert, Barbara (2002). "Integrating Models of Diffusion of Innovations: A Conceptual Framework." Annual Review of Sociology 28: 297–326.
- Werner, Michael, and Bénédicte Zimmermann (2002). "Vergleich, Transfer, Verflechtung: Der Ansatz der Histoire croisée und die Herausforderung des Transnationalen." Geschichte und Gesellschaft 28/4: 607–36.
- Wohlrab-Sahr, Monika, and Marian Burchardt (2011). "Vielfältige Säkularitäten: Vorschlag zu einer vergleichenden Analyse religiös-säkularer Grenzziehungen." Denkströme 7: 53–71.
- Wohlrab-Sahr, Monika, and Marian Burchardt (2012). "Multiple Secularities: Toward a Cultural Sociology of Secular Modernities." Comparative Sociology 11/6: 875–909. doi:10.1163/15691330-12341249.
- Wohlrab-Sahr, Monika, Thomas Schmidt-Lux, and Uta Karstein (2008). "Secularization as Conflict." Social Compass 55/2: 127–39.
- Yanagawa, Keiichi, and Abe Yoshiya (1978). "Some Observations on the Sociology of Religion in Japan." Japanese Journal of Religious Studies 5/1: 5–27.
- Zander, Helmut (2016). "Europäische" Religionsgeschichte: Religiöse Zugehörigkeit durch Entscheidung - Konsequenzen im interkulturellen Vergleich. Berlin, Boston: De Gruyter Oldenbourg.

