CIC Seminar 2016 | Herodotus

August 2, 2016 Posted by Emily Kohut under Sunoikisis News

The Center for Hellenic Studies would like to extend their greatest thanks and appreciation to all of those who participated in this summer's Council of Independent Colleges (CIC) seminar. This summer participants worked their way through the nine books of Herodotus' Histories while also reading secondary literature in order to present these texts to students across [...] Read more...

Faculty

Sunoikisis offers a faculty members a range of opportunities for involvement. Many faculty members offer the Sunoikisis courses at their institutions and lead one of the weekly common sessions. Others participate in the course planning seminar and assist in evaluating student examinations. Senior faculty serve as course consultants during the planning sessions and work with the course directors who run the planning seminars and coordinate the weekly common sessions during the fall courses.

Current Participating Faculty

The following faculty members are teaching or assisted in planning the 2016-17 Sunoikisis courses.

Monica Berti is Assistant Professor at the University of Leipzig (Alexander von Humboldt Chair of Digital Humanities), where she teaches courses in digital philology and digital scholarly editing. She has been working since 2008 with the Perseus Digital Library at Tufts University, where she has also been visiting professor in the Department of Classics. Her research interests are mainly focused on ancient Greece and the digital humanities and she has been extensively publishing and leading projects in both fields. She is currently working on representing quotations and text reuses of ancient lost works and she is leading the Leipzig Open Fragmentary Texts Series (LOFTS), which is part of the Open Philology Project of the Humboldt Chair of Digital Humanities at the University of Leipzig. One of the correlated projects of LOFTS is a new digital edition of Athenaeus' Deipnosophists. She is also currently leading a Sunoikisis program in Digital Classics in Europe.

Jennifer Besse studied classics and archaeology at New College in Florida (BA 1994), and continued her work in classics at the University of Wisconsin in Madison (MA 1995) where she focused on the politics of archaic Greek poetry. While studying classics, she was an archaeological illustrator in the field (Belgium and Israel) and in the UW lab (Oaxaca and Harappan cultures). After teaching Latin in a high school outside DC for four years, she took a break from classics as a scuba instructor in St. Thomas, USVI and as a 50-ton boat captain in Clearwater, FL. She returned to classics in 2012 and has been teaching classics at Elizabethtown College and Millersville University in Lancaster County, PA.

Patrick J. Burns is the Assistant Research Scholar and Digital & Special Projects Associate at the Institute for the Study of the Ancient World Library. He recently received his doctorate from Fordham University where he completed a dissertation on the influence of Latin love elegy on Lucan's Bellum Civile. Patrick is active in the field of Digital Classics and is currently working on a project for Google Summer of
